(Address by James Garitty, president First National Bank, Corsicana, Tex., before the Texas State Bankers' Association at Fort Worth, Tex., June 5, 1908.)

Mr. President and gentlemen, in advocating the guarantee or insurance of bank deposits so that every depositor will be able to get his or her money on demand from a sound or unsound bank those who know me and the bank I represent will, I am sure, give me credit for not having any interested motive in advocating such guaranty. If we had solely in view the interest of the stockholder and the amount of his dividends, it would not be the best for some banks to have all banks fully guaranteed, but it would certainly be best for the interest of the depositors who furnish the banks the money out of which dividends are earned, and in my opinion is the very best that can be done now or at any time for the prevention of panics such as we have passed through of late. The cause of our late panic has been fully discussed in the papers and magazines, and as is usual in such discussions there are nearly as many opinions as there are writers on this subject, but I assert, without fear of valid refutation, that the only thing that ever has or ever will start a panic is the fear of the depositor that he will not be able to get his money when he demands it. If you satisfy him absolutely that he can get his money whenever he wants it, he will never withdraw any except for actual needs, and all bankers know that such demands can be met with very little actual cash. Many men of high financial standing and authority, whom we have heretofore looked to for information and guidance in such matters, ridicule the idea of insurance of bank deposits and attack it by putting up a straw man or plan that no one advocates, then proceed to knock down him or it with ponderous figures and financial plans that none but the great captains of high finance can understand or appreciate. If the plain depositors thoroughly understood these plans, which are, as a rule, in the interest of the few who are so strong that they do not need protection, they would repudiate the plans of the high financiers as the financiers do the insurance of bank deposits. They tell us that if deposits were insured rascals would be invited to become bankers and enabled to cover themselves with a mantle of credit that they could not otherwise acquire, just as if those who advocate the insurance of bank deposits were in favor of same without any proper regulation of the banks whose deposits were insured or guaranteed. I am as much opposed as anyone to the guarantee of deposits until such reasonable safeguards are thrown around the business as will reduce to a minimum the opportunity of the incapable or dishonest to take advantage of such guaranty. We have always had incompetent or dishonest men in all lines of business and always will, but the banking laws can be easily amended so that the number under the guaranteed plan will be less instead of greater than heretofore.

In outlining and advocating a general plan of deposit insurance I believe that it is at the present time useless to enter into details, though those necessary to put the plan in successful operation would be few and simple, from the fact that the financiers who control the party in power will be able to defeat any such law until the people become fully aware of the absolute need of same and the demand for it becomes too strong for the politicians to resist. The reform in this matter—and I believe it is a most necessary reform—will probably be inaugurated by the States.

Oklahoma has started the ball rolling, and if a few more join in it will be but a short time before the Federal Government will be forced to follow suit, else all national banks will be at a disadvantage compared with State banks whose deposits are fully guaranteed. If all bank deposits were fully secured there would under the plan I advocate be no more money panics and no piling up of money in the large centers when and where it is not needed for legitimate business, but is attracted by those who furnish money to gamblers on the stock exchange. Statistics furnished by the Comptroller of the Currency show that $400,000,000 of the $700,000,000 loaned by the national banks of New York is loaned on stocks and bonds. The insurance of bank deposits is the only remedy worth mentioning for the prevention of panics, and in my opinion, the only absolute remedy that will ever be found. The Aldrich bill, the Fowler bill, the American Bankers' Association plan, a large central bank, and so forth, are palliative only. A billion or two billion dollars of emergency currency will not satisfy the demand when depositors get scared. Only one thing will suffice, and that is to absolutely satisfy the depositor that he can get his money when he wants it. You all know the old story of the man who was anxious for his money until he found he could get it, then did not want it at all. That man still keeps an account with your bank, with my bank, and with every other bank on earth. With deposits absolutely secure we have all the currency we need now or are likely to need for a long time to come, for, as Mr. Wanamaker says, there is a plenty now hid under carpets that will go to the bank when they know positively that they can get it when needed, and whenever on account of expensive business we need more the Government can and should provide and furnish it to the banks on their putting up proper collateral until same is redeemed. A late report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that 53 per cent of the total money in the country is outside of the Treasury or banks. Money panics affect all business and all people, and though they may be short lived so far as the demand for actual cash is concerned, the bad effects on business and general prosperity often lasts for years after money is again, as at present, plentiful. Insurance of bank deposits is the only thing that will absolutely prevent panics, and it appears to me to be the height of selfishness on the part of large and strong banks to object to the absolute security of all banks, so far as deposits are concerned, for the reason, as they say, that it would reduce all banks to a level—the weak and incompetent the same as the strong and well managed. As a matter of fact, it would not do so, because the large banks will still have the advantage under the plan I advocate of larger deposits and larger loans, just as it has now; but if it did reduce all banks to a level, which it will not, the duty we all owe to the country at large and the special duty that we owe our depositors—the people who furnish us a living—should make all of us advocate the absolute guaranty of every dollar that is deposited in a bank. This guaranty would cost the banks very little. Indeed, forty-odd years of experience with national banks prove that one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the average deposits has heretofore covered all losses, and under the guaranteed plan it would be much less, less than most banks pay for advertising alone and less than one-tenth of the amount banks pay for interest on balances payable on demand. Have you, my fellow bankers, ever thought in connection with this question that you are, with few if there are any exceptions, depositors yourselves in other banks, and however careful you may be at home you are to some extent dependent on the solvency of many other banks for the protection of your depositors and stockholders? How comforting it would have been to know during the height of our late unpleasantness that all your correspondents were insured and you could get your balance whenever you ordered it. Every bank in the United States had the same tired feeling, and even the New York banks had, no doubt, money with other banks about which they had, to say the least, some anxiety. Even big names and big capital will not give depositors the feeling of absolute security such as insurance of deposits will.

When the lid was on, the best institutions in the country were looked on with more or less suspicion; and, if the truth must be told, banks were more scared of one another than the depositors were of them, perhaps because we were better posted than the ordinary depositor, if not more suspicious.

They say it is rank communism to tax good banks for the faults and ignorance of bad ones, yet we tax ourselves to provide a police force to protect us against crime and violence; a school tax for educational purposes; taxes for roads, bridges, canals, and so forth; and no one thinks it communism. Then why is it communism to tax banks for the protection of the people out of whom they make their living and to whom in justice, to say nothing of gratitude, they owe everything that can possibly be done for their protection? The matter of deposit insurance is so plain, simple, inexpensive, and desirable in every way that it seems to me little short of a crime to deny our depositors, the people out of whom we make our living, what they are justly entitled to, what they have a right to demand and will demand before long—a demand we should be foreseeing enough to meet before it is forced on us. If it is wrong to tax us in order that our deposits be secured, the United States Government is indirectly doing that very thing to-day. The 100 per cent liability of shareholders, restricting loans to 10 per cent of capital and surplus, amount of reserve to be held at all times, examinations by expert accountants, and frequent statements published under oath—all these matters are a partial guaranty to depositors, and are paid for by the banks, just as the full guaranty would and should be paid for.

In addition to the laws and regulations governing national and other banks at present, I would suggest the following:

1. Strict and frequent examinations by expert examiners.
2. Insured banks to pay no interest on insured deposits.
3. Total amount of loans, investments, or liabilities of any character whatever to never exceed from six to ten times the capital paid in.
4. Total reserve to be kept at home.

This would, I believe, make our system of banking the strongest in the world, would bring out every dollar now kept in hiding, and cost next to nothing. The amount of tax or fund to be raised in the beginning in order to put the plan in successful operation is a question of detail, but the States or the United States should be custodian of such fund, and the fund should be large enough at the outset to dispel all doubts on the part of the public.

The insurance of bank deposits is practically a mutual insurance, to which all banks should contribute in proportion to the amount that depositors trust them with; and in this connection I wish to call your attention to the great saving in such insurance as evidenced by the lumberman underwriters' insurance of this State. I am told by one of the members that this insurance has only cost them to date about 15 per cent of the current rate charged by regular insurance companies, and the rate now charged by regular companies is much less than it used to be on account of the mutual insurance. This goes to show how little the insurance of deposits will cost the banks, and since it is not only a patriotic duty that we owe to the whole people, but a special duty that we owe to the people who trust us with their money and look to us for protection, I hope the time will soon come when to say you have money in the bank means that you have money that is absolutely safe so far as human endeavor can make it.

I ask from this body, most of whom are young men engaged in a business that from an ethical standpoint should occupy a higher plane than any other business, a due and careful consideration of the justice and equity of this plan, and I want to impress upon you not only the desirability of it from a business standpoint but the absolute right of the depositor to insist on such guaranty. I know that this plan will not be favored by the captains of industry and the great moneyed institutions that attract money by the magnitude of their capital, for when all banks are absolutely secure the crossroads bank will have the same power of attraction that big banks have up to the limit allowed by law; and they should have it, for, as a matter of fact, the small bank is often the safest and strongest so far as ability to meet liabilities on short notice is concerned. No bank should be allowed to do business unless it is willing and able to pay the small amount that it would cost to absolutely insure and guarantee their deposits, and the depositor in the smallest bank should feel as secure and be as secure as if his money was in the Bank of England or France.

In my opinion there is no question about the desirability of deposit insurance for all banks, and the only question is, Can it be accomplished without undue expense to the sound and well-managed banks? The record of our national banks operating under the national-bank laws for over 40 years goes to show that it can be done at a very small expense, and with some change in these laws, such as I have suggested, the expense will be less. Then, why hesitate to advocate and insist on this reform which will cost so little and be of immense advantage not only to the country at large, but especially to the people who furnish the money out of which all banks and bankers earn salaries and dividends? Banks that loan money to merchants or others who have perishable property insist on same being insured for their protection, then why not be willing to insure for the protection of the people who loan you their money without interest and on whom your success or failure depends?

In conclusion, I beg leave to submit some of my reasons for the changes that I suggest in the present laws and regulations governing national and other banks when deposits are guaranteed or insured. They are not by any means all the good reasons that can be given, but enough for the present.

1. Strict and frequent examinations by expert examiners.

Bankers and those who have a thorough knowledge of the cause of bank failures agree that in nearly every case the cause of failure is attributable to the misconduct of officers and directors, and strict and frequent examinations will eliminate to a great extent the people who are guilty of such misconduct. The law should be made plain and rigidly enforced.

2. Insured banks to pay no interest on insured deposits. Why? Because there will then be no inducement for depositors to put their money in a bank that has been organized more for the purpose of borrowing money than to transact a legitimate business in the interest of the whole community.

3. Total amount of loans, investments, or liabilities of any character whatever to never exceed from six to ten times the capital paid in. This will prevent reckless and excessive loans and investments—the cause of nearly all failures—by banks that have not sufficient capital to stand such losses. An individual or a bank has the right to risk their own money in whatever way they see fit, but have no right morally, and they should be denied the legal right to so risk other people's money. If such a law was rigidly enforced, there would be very little loss to the guaranty fund. I have probably made the figures too high, since the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency show that the total liabilities of all national banks in proportion to capital is only about 5 to 1, but this is a matter of detail that can be worked out by the expert, whose figures should be based on past experience. What I wish to emphasize is that a bank should never be allowed to hold or invest the money of depositors beyond a safe limit and in proportion to its actual capital paid in. In other words, the stockholders would have to lose a large proportion of such risks before the guaranty fund would lose any. It is dangerous for a bank to have deposits out of all proportion to capital, and should be stopped by law.

4. All reserve to be kept at home.

Reserve should be kept at home because the reserve in other banks is in times of stress no reserve at all. During the late panic what good was your reserve in other banks? You could not get a dollar of it. Your depositors knew this also, and it made them all the more anxious for their money. Only banks who were farseeing enough to keep a large cash balance at home were able to continue business without restricting withdrawals. Keeping a large part of your reserve in other banks has a tendency to pile up money in the money centers, and there is where panics invariably start. The failure of reserve banks to respond to the demands of their correspondents caused nearly all other banks in the country, though they were perfectly sound, to suspend payments or limit them to an amount that was the same as suspension. Again, when a large portion of reserve is kept in other banks, published statements are misleading, for where a dollar is drawn out of the country bank it diminishes the reserve the same amount in two or three other banks where reserves are kept.

Cash and only cash should be computed as reserve. Reserve cities, where the reserves of the country bank are kept, all have clearing houses, and I believe the department allows such banks to count checks on the clearing house as reserve. Such checks may mean cash or may mean nothing. Banks in such cities often have checks on each other amounting to hundreds of millions; and if all is counted as reserve, when said checks are handed over to the respective banks by the clearing house there may be a complete offset and no money coming to any of them. Then where is the reserve so counted? They say that they have paid off so much of their liability with the checks they have on the other banks, which is true, but it does not show the true proportion of reserve to liability, since $1 of reserve stands for $4 of liabilities.

I am not acquainted with the way in which the great banks of the world outside of the United States do business, but I am satisfied they do not count as reserve deposits in or drafts on other banks, but money only. On the other hand, the department does not allow our national banks to count national-bank notes as reserve, though they are just as good as any other kind of money in circulation and should be so counted. In my opinion the insurance or guarantee of bank deposits is the most important question that the banks and bankers of this country have ever had before them for consideration, and I hope and trust that this body will give the matter due consideration, and that their decision will be such as will benefit the whole people without doing injustice to anyone.

SAN BENITO BANK & TRUST CO.,
San Benito, Tex., September 25, 1913.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am writing you to urge the early passage of the currency bill, and to urge that it be passed as near as possible in its present original form with as few amendments as possible.

I believe that the bill is the best work of the committee, and it is the nearest what we want of anything that could be devised at this time. I feel that any change in it would be a compromise of principles, and we hope for as few of them as possible.

Congress has done such splendid work on the revision of the tariff that we are all proud of it, and, like President Wilson, we feel that to make the tariff bill more effectual the passage of the currency bill is necessary. Personally I deem it vitally more important. I would have been glad to have seen it passed first.

The present financial system, or lack of system, is so vicious, illogical, inconsistent, and detrimental to the progress of the business of this Nation that it should be corrected at the earliest possible date.

I hope you will pardon me for presuming to write this appeal to you, but having to do with finance (even in the small way that I have had to do with it) I realize the need of this change.

With President Wilson in the saddle and Secretary Bryan leading the Democratic donkey, we people down here sleep soundly every night.

Yours, most sincerely,

ALBA HEYWOOD,
President.

Why Our Foreign Trade is Growing.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 17, 1913.

The House granted Mr. AUSTIN leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on "Why our foreign trade is growing."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I submit, on the subject named, an address delivered by Mr. James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, before the Fourth Annual Convention of the American Manufacturers' Export Association, held in New York City on September 25, 1913. This address will be of interest and value to all Americans who rejoice in the extension and growth of our trade in foreign markets. Mr. Farrell is the best-posted man in the United States on this subject. Prior to his election as president of the United States Steel Corporation he was for many years at the head of the export department of that great corporation, and it was due to his able and efficient management that our iron and steel exports have so greatly increased, until last year they amounted to $304,605,797, out of a total of $1,187,000,460 of manufactured exports. Mr. Farrel has spent several years abroad in studying industrial conditions, investigating the methods of foreign manufacturers and exporters, and is to-day, in my judgment, the best-informed man in America on the tariff and on our opportunities for the extension of trade in foreign lands.

In this connection it is not out of place to state that the splendid record of our increase of sales last year in foreign markets was under the much-abused Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

The following is the address referred to:

"Gentlemen, the American Manufacturers' Export Association includes within its membership representatives of many of our country's industrial enterprises. The manufacturers of the United States are looking beyond its borders for markets wherein they can profitably dispose of their manufactures; and commensurate with our position as one of the foremost producing nations, substantial progress is being made, one reason being the improvement in quality and character of our produce as a result of systematic study of the requirements of foreign markets, thereby creating a permanent basis for a wider expansion of our already important commerce.

"The growth of our country's foreign trade furnishes a striking example of what can be accomplished by adapting our products to the requirements of over-sea markets. We have the courage and enterprise to compete with older manufacturing countries, and our banking and manufacturing institutions are acquiring a knowledge of the opportunities in foreign markets; and as a result of the increased efficiency of the productive establishments of the country, capacity for organization, and commercial development, American manufacturers are achieving success in foreign fields.

"Those engaged in conducting an export business appreciate the difficulties and almost insurmountable obstacles to be overcome. However, they are not insuperable, and it is largely a question of adapting ourselves to prevailing trade customs, complying with requirements, adopting current systems of weights and measures, furnishing goods such as the buyer is accustomed to receive, and selling at competitive prices in the currency of the country to which the goods are shipped. These are some of the fundamentals to be considered in establishing a foreign trade.

"The struggle for a foothold in foreign markets presents many difficulties, but effort, if sustained, is eventually rewarded. England, at the zenith of her industrial career, is strong and powerful; Germany, with her wonderful facilities, is a leader in the struggle for commercial supremacy; Belgium exports over half of her production and France is increasing her foreign trade; Russia, with her vast territory and uncounted population, has to be reckoned with; Japan does not buy anything abroad which can be produced in her own country, but is producing largely for sale to other countries. If the United States is to occupy the place for which the bountiful resources of nature and the efficiency of her people have equipped her, the intelligence, enterprise, and cooperation of the people and Government must be applied to maintain and strengthen her position.

"The export commission merchants are valuable mediums to manufacturers. They are arteries, so to speak, with facilities in various markets, and their contact with buyers in distant countries insures constant knowledge of trade conditions. Selling and distributing is of paramount importance. The manufacture of goods is usually simpler than the determination of the proper channels through which to sell them, and the human factor and not alone the goods offered, is frequently responsible for results. The goods must be right, of course; but as a large percentage of exports is consumed by people whose ideas and requirements differ from ours, the proper effort must be made to reach and interest them.

"The motto of the American Manufacturers' Export Association is 'to foster and promote foreign commerce.' It is a representative commercial body, whose influence is expanding in the development of foreign trade. It is the aim of its officers and members to make it a useful and important factor in building up and increasing the exports of American manufactures and in advancing the commercial interests of our country. Its members come directly in contact with the markets of the world, and by dealing along broad lines and by showing each other the best that is in us a spirit of mutual helpfulness is cultivated in our commercial intercourse in the largest possible exchange of trade with other nations, which makes for industrial prosperity.

"To reach the goal for which we are striving it is necessary to acquire a knowledge of the requirements of foreign markets, and, while the problems are many, American manufacturers are making substantial progress in this direction. It is not by isolation that results are accomplished, hence the cooperative spirit manifested by the members of this body through interchange of ideas regarding matters of common interest.

"Its members are devoting their best efforts to the development of closer commercial relations between the United States of America and other nations. We belong to a class whose minds are open to the lessons of the world's progress. We are a nonpartisan organization, and consequently are able to deal with matters on an impartial basis.

"The members of this association represent industries located throughout the country, therefore any increase or expansion of foreign trade is considered a common growth and a common prosperity, irrespective of the class of goods, the size of the industry, the locality from which the business originates, or the port of clearance from which the products are shipped.

"The function of the association is to impart to its members, regardless of locality or size, such facts as are ascertainable with respect to foreign-trade opportunities and to assist each other in their efforts to increase business in foreign markets. It has been the fashion to criticize export methods, and there are, doubtless, cases deserving criticism; but my observation, extending over many years in the export business and based on direct personal acquaintance with the world's markets, warrants the statement that the products of our country and our methods of doing business are equal to, and in many cases superior to, the products and methods of our European competitors.

"By the use of special machinery capable of producing material which meets the diversified requirements of export markets, by the utilization of inventions, experiments, and improvements, American manufacturers are increasing the efficiency of their plants and are entering an era of expansion in the foreign commerce of the country. This is reflected in the large increase during the past few years in the exports of manufacture and equally large decreases in the exports of unmanufactured products.

"During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, our total exports of domestic merchandise were $2,428,506,358. This amount included foodstuffs, crude, $181,693,263, about 7½ per cent; foodstuffs, partly or wholly manufactured, $320,401,482, about 13 per cent; manufactured goods, $1,187,000,000, about 49 per cent; cotton and other crude materials for use in manufacturing made up the balance. The balance of trade in our favor for the year amounted, in round figures, to $653,000,000.

"That American manufacturers have made and are making progress is manifest. Time does not permit of a summary of these assuring evidences, but a few items are worthy of mention.

Exports of domestic manufactures, not including foodstuffs, partly or wholly manufactured, 1913.

Agricultural implements	$40,572,352
Cars, carriages, and other vehicles, and parts of	54,585,888
Chemicals, drugs, dyes, etc	26,574,519
Copper, manufactures of	140,164,913
Cotton manufactures	53,743,977
Explosives	5,267,566
Fibers, vegetable, manufactures of	10,963,946
India rubber, manufactures of	14,324,894
Iron and steel manufactures	304,605,797
Leather and manufactures of	63,893,351
Naval stores	26,471,292
Oils, refined mineral	129,666,995
Paints, pigments, and colors	7,681,938
Paper and manufactures of	21,779,303
Paraffin and paraffin wax	9,679,273
Soap	4,629,567
Wood manufactures	111,253,125
Miscellaneous	161,141,764
Total	1,187,000,460

"The older manufacturing nations are well intrenched in foreign markets, but that we are making headway is indicated by the fact that the total value of our exports of domestic merchandise for the 12 months ending June 30, 1913, exceeded by $258,000,000 our exports for the preceding fiscal year. These figures represent an enlargement of the foreign trade of the country; means of communication between the United States and foreign markets are being improved and increased.

"The growth of our export trade has resulted during the past few years in the establishment of several additional lines of steamers to Latin-American and other foreign ports, where insufficient facilities previously existed, and the continued increase in trade should be accompanied by a corresponding enlargement of ocean transportation facilities. American manufacturers suffer to a less extent than formerly in the matter of adequate shipping facilities, and while more frequent opportunities exist from European ports, it is chiefly because the business exists; and while lower freights are obtainable in some instances, steamship owners are gradually realizing that rates from the United States must be on a parity with those from Europe.

"Opportunities for commercial expansion in foreign countries exist, and while the field is largely occupied by European nations, the demands are large and opportunities many and what other nations have done the United States can do. As a rule, we are intent upon being merchants rather than investors, and up to the present investments of American capital in foreign countries have been of a limited character. Our capital has been employed at home rather than abroad, and when it is considered that England's investments in railways and industrial enterprises in Argentina alone yield $250,000,000 annually in interest return, it explains to some extent the hold that Europe has and will have for many years on business in various consuming markets.

"South American countries sell us annually nearly twice as much as they buy from us. Our Government furnishes facilities through consular reports, but the individual manufacturer must make an intelligent study of the requirements of the trade, since the efforts of consuls and commercial agents of the Department of Commerce are of little avail unless supported by individual action.

"The Department of Commerce is to be commended for its study of business and economic conditions prevailing throughout the world, and its daily bulletin of Consular and Trade Reports bring large numbers of trade opportunities to the attention of American manufacturers. The branches of our Government concerned with foreign commerce display a keen interest in its development.

"Our Consular Service is a valuable help to the exporter. Its efficiency is increasing, and the sincerity of consular officers and the interest taken by them in extending trade has enabled American manufacturers to secure information of a reliable character. The retention of competent and experienced consular officials in the service is encouraging. The Pan American Union has rendered invaluable assistance to merchants, manufacturers, and producers, and through its efficient staff has done much to foster friendly relations between the Republics of North and South America.

"The importance of this association can hardly be overestimated as a factor in the economic development of the country. It deals with the multitudinous detail incident to exports and discusses matters of vital interest to American export trade. Dissemination of information, interchange of ideas, and cooperation tend to stimulate an intercourse which is of material as well as of educational value to its members, and place our manufacturing industries upon a more intelligent basis to meet the commerce of the world.

"The assembling of this body, comprising, as it does, manufacturers from nearly all of the States of the Union engaged in the manufacture of a great diversity of product, takes place at a time when the mind of the country is interested in the near approach of the opening of the Panama Canal, which will give an impetus to American trade and awaken the manufacturing, industrial, and agricultural interests of our country to the commercial possibilities not only in Pan America but in many other consuming markets."

Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

OF

HON. JOE J. RUSSELL,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, October 20, 1913.

The House granted Mr. RUSSELL leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech made by him before the Democratic caucus, Wednesday, March 5, 1913, placing in nomination Hon. CHAMP CLARK for Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the caucus, the pleasant duty has been assigned to me by the Democratic members of the Missouri delegation to present to this caucus as a candidate for Speaker of the Sixty-third Congress Missouri's best beloved and most distinguished son.

This privilege is to me a labor of love, made so by a lifetime of warm personal friendship, and doubly so by reason of the fact that 24 years ago he performed a like service for me in the legislature of the State from which we come, but especially so because of his peculiar fitness for the Speakership and his distinguished services to his party and his country.

You ask me from whence he comes. I answer that he comes from the heart of the Mississippi Valley, that produces three-fourths of the foodstuffs that feed the Nation and that furnishes the great majority of the farm products that are exported to other countries. He comes from the imperial State of Missouri, the wealthiest and the most populous of the 13 States carved out of that great domain known as the Louisiana Purchase, acquired through the wisdom and statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the party we all love. He comes from one of the wealthiest and most enlightened districts represented in the American Congress, bordered upon the south by the Missouri River and upon the north and east by the Mississippi—a district that he has long honored by his faithful services as its Representative and a district that will continue to honor him, without Democratic opposition, as long as he lives, unless he should be promoted by his countrymen to a place of higher honor in his country's service.

You ask me if he is worthy of this distinction. I point you to his life's history. First as a farmer's boy, later as a clerk in a store, teacher, country editor, city attorney, prosecuting attorney of his county, member and leader of his party in the Missouri State Legislature, 18 years' service in Congress, and in the last Democratic national convention receiving on nine ballots a majority vote for nominee of that great party for President of the United States. Any American boy of humble birth who by his own ambition, his own industry and efforts, accomplishes so much is worthy of any honor our party or our country can bestow.

You ask if he deserves this honor at the hands of the Democratic Party. I point you to his lifetime of faithful and uninterrupted services to that party by pen, voice, and vote and his unwavering devotion to its principles. He has made more speeches in more States in support of his party, its platforms, and candidates, with one exception, than any other man living or dead.

You ask me if he is capable. I point you to his well-known ability as a Member of Congress, and to his invaluable services as the leader of our party in the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses. He did more than any other one man to bring together all the Democratic Members of Congress into one united and harmonious body that contributed so much to the election of a Democratic House, to be followed by our great national victory, and the election to the Presidency of the able and brilliant Woodrow Wilson.

I point you to his record as Speaker of the Sixty-second Congress that has won for him the plaudits of the American people, and the confidence, the respect, and the universal praise of the entire membership of this House regardless of political affiliations.

You do not ask me if he is honest. The world knows that. During his public life of almost a quarter of a century no man, either political friend or foe, has charged, or even insinuated, that he has ever been insincere, unfaithful, or dishonest, and no one in public life has ever more perfectly had the confidence of the whole people. His private life is spotless, his fidelity to his public trust is proverbial, and his public life is free from blemish or reproach. He loves his friends and trusts them with perfect confidence, and never doubts their sincerity or loyalty until their disloyalty has been established by a positive injury.

As a presiding officer he is able, just, and impartial. On one occasion in rendering a decision from the chair he said that when he finally lays down the gavel as Speaker of the House he would rather have it said of him that he has been the fairest Speaker who has presided over the House than that he has been the greatest Speaker.

Mr. Chairman, without underestimating the good qualities or the abilities of the many great men who have preceded him as Speaker, I can with perfect confidence say that his name will go into history both as one of the fairest and as one of the greatest Speakers that has ever filled that high and honorable office.

I esteem it a great privilege, as it is to me a great pleasure, to nominate as the choice of this caucus for Speaker of the Sixty-third Congress CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri.

The late John Fletcher Lacey.

REMARKS

HON. SANFORD KIRKPATRICK,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, October 16, 1913.

The House granted Mr. KIRKPATRICK leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD relative to the services of the late Hon. John F. Lacey, who served as a distinguished Member of the House for 14 years.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sadness that on this occasion I place, as it were, a flower of love and reverence on the newly made grave of a man who for 18 years occupied a seat as an honored Member in this Chamber.

If heroic deeds were roses, then we could build and decorate therewith a triumphal arch all along the pathway of his eventful life—and best and most of all, he was an honest man.

I refer to John Fletcher Lacey. Doubtless he had enemies, and by his strict adherence to duty as he saw it he may have added others. Even the Son of Man in his advocacy of human rights and the plan of salvation became a martyr. In his heart there had been reared a temple of truth, and his lips, now cold in death, were the oracles of his greatness.

I am pleased to note that to-day I am the duly accredited Representative of the congressional district that once heralded the name of Lacey at its masthead.

He was born in Virginia in 1841. At the age of 14 he moved to Iowa, attended the common schools, and pursued classical studies. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and at once took rank in the forefront of his chosen profession. He enlisted in Company H, Third Iowa Infantry, in May, 1861, and again in Company D, Thirty-third Iowa; was made assistant adjutant general on the staff of Gen. Samuel A. Rice and subsequently promoted as a staff officer with Maj. Gen. Steele.

As a Member of Congress he was a constructive legislator.

From an humble cottage nestled among the Virginia hills he made his way to the Capitol of the Nation. In the forum of debate but few were able to withstand his shafts of repartee or resist the forceful logic of his eloquence.

Nations do not always lose by the loss of rulers, and while the light and life of this great man have gone out from among us, still his example and influence for good will live forever.

I am to mourn with those who lament his death, for his life was a burst of sunshine. I knew him as a comrade in war and a brother in peace.

In the triumph of an eventful and well-spent life the summons came, and the bugle blast that called him to arms has since reverberated back in the melody of a trumpet, summoning him beyond the veil which separates all earthly vision from the paradise of God.

Frankford Arsenal Economies.

OF

HON. J. HAMPTON MOORE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, October 31, 1913.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, under the skillful management of the Bureau of Ordnance, War Department, the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, has made a record for efficiency and economy which ought to receive substantial recognition at the hands of Congress. As at present conducted, the arsenal is one of the real money-saving—which is money making—establishments of the Government. It is practically indispensable to the country; and yet for many years its great work of producing small-arms ammunition for the Army and the Navy has been performed in buildings the inadequacy of which would not be tolerated in private plants and on grounds the limitations of which are perceptibly inferior to the standards set by the Government's competitors.

So urgently, indeed, do the needs of this famous old servant of the United States stand out to every visitor; so important to the Government has it become that new and modern structures shall be provided and more ground acquired to safeguard the life and property employed in the daily operation of the works that I have asked permission to place in the RECORD some of the salient facts with regard to the arsenal's history and national usefulness.

The statement herewith submitted has been prepared with great care and embraces much interesting and valuable information culled from official sources. To students of the problem of government efficiency in the manufacture of Government supplies it is a forceful presentation. To those who are watching the trend of Government expenditures and economies it is a revelation:

SUPPLIES BOTH ARMY AND NAVY.

1. The Frankford Arsenal was established in 1814 and formally opened in 1817 by President Madison. It manufactures principally all the small-arms ammunition used by the Army, Navy, and Organized Militia of the United States; the greater part of the artillery ammunition used by the Army, and nearly all the fire-control instruments, sights, etc., used by the mobile and seacoast artillery.

2. The Frankford Arsenal is located in the northeast section of Philadelphia, at the junction of the Delaware River and the Frankford Creek. The arsenal is 500 yards from the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad between Philadelphia and New York. It is also located at the terminus of one of the important street railroad lines of the city and within about 20 minutes' walk of the Frankford Station of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad. Its location places it in one of the most important industrial centers of the United States and makes it easily accessible to all parts of the city.

3. The Frankford Arsenal has a more economical location than any other. Its location in the city of Philadelphia makes it easily accessible for 250,000 skilled workmen living therein. It is within 275 miles of the soft-coal fields of Pennsylvania, from which it procures its fuel; within 150 miles of Connecticut, from which it draws its brass for manufacturing purposes; within 57 miles of Bethlehem, Pa., 58 miles of Reading, Pa., and 350 miles of Pittsburgh, Pa., and within the city of Philadelphia, from which it draws its steel for the same purpose; and within 30 miles of Carneys Point, N. J., and within 136 miles of Picatinny Arsenal, N. J., from which it procures its explosives for manufacturing ammunition.

4. The favorable location of the Frankford Arsenal for manufacturing purposes was recognized as early as 1875 by a board of ordnance officers, which recommended at that time that the Frankford Arsenal be enlarged and about 75 acres of additional land be purchased for this purpose. The advantages which have made Philadelphia the greatest manufacturing city in the country obtain equally well with regard to one of its leading manufacturing establishments—the Frankford Arsenal.

5. The Frankford Arsenal is the second largest arsenal, being exceeded by the Rock Island Arsenal.

6. The value and variety of its manufactures are believed to be greater than those of any other arsenal.

7. It has the best transportation facilities of any arsenal. It has direct railroad connections with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and owing to Philadelphia being a great railroad center it can obtain a supply of appropriate cars for any purpose with the utmost dispatch. The arsenal has a dock on the Frankford Creek—which is not a creek at all, but a navigable inlet of the Delaware River—so that shipments may be made by barges, thus making connections with other railroad lines. It has unfortunately no available frontage on the Delaware River.

8. Frankford Arsenal has the least acreage of any manufacturing arsenal. For every acre it has an output of $37,400 of manufactures, which is much greater than that of any other arsenal. The estimated value of the Frankford Arsenal is about $3,500,000.

9. The striking economies of the Frankford Arsenal as a manufacturing establishment are fully set forth in the attached tabulation. It will be seen from the statements contained in these tabulations that the Frankford Arsenal will save on existing orders for manufacturing ammunition nearly $980.000 as compared with the prices charged by private manufacturers. If the arsenal had sufficient capacity for all the orders given for artillery ammunition it would have made an additional saving of over $312,000. In the manufacture of small-arms ammunition last year it effected a saving of over $610,000 as compared with the prices paid private manufacturers. The Frankford Arsenal, therefore, on the orders executed last year for small-arms ammunition and on orders that will be executed this fiscal year on artillery ammunition will effect a saving to the United States Government of nearly $1,590,000. The Frankford Arsenal therefore pays for itself every two and one-half years.

10. The economies referred to in the preceding paragraph and described in the attached detailed statements are not all of the savings resulting to the Government from having the Frankford Arsenal, for that establishment in addition utilized during the last fiscal year nearly $221,000 worth of scrap materials received from military and naval sources in its manufacturing operations, and, furthermore, utilized surplus stock on hand to the value of over $160,000, thus making an additional saving of over $380,000, or a grand total saving in appropriations made by Congress of the magnificent sum of approximately $1,970,000.

STRIKING ECONOMIES SHOWN.

The tabulated statements which follow show the savings made at the Frankford Arsenal in the manufacture of artillery ammunition and small-arms ammunition when comparison is made with the latest contract prices for the same articles procured from outside manufactures; and these statements also show the additional savings that would be made if the Frankford Arsenal had the capacity to manufacture the articles of artillery ammunition so ordered from outside manufacturers.

It must not be overlooked that the Frankford Arsenal manufactures in quantity other articles of artillery ammunition which are not procured from outside manufacturers, and, therefore, in such case comparison of cost can not be made and no savings reported.

The contract cost of finished shrapnel-case forgings for the 3-inch gun and of a limited number for the 4.7-inch gun comprise the cost of the shrapnel-case forgings as procured from the outside manufacturer and the additional arsenal cost of machining them, so as to place the finished shrapnel case in the same condition as the corresponding shrapnel cases manufactured at the arsenal, for otherwise in these cases no comparison of cost can be made.

The total arsenal costs include 15 per cent to cover administration, depreciation, insurance, and interest charges. The contract cost includes 3 per cent, which is added to the contract price, to cover the cost of inspection, such as compensation of inspector, cost of conducting firing tests, and so forth.

NEEDS OF THE ARSENAL.

An inspection of the Frankford Arsenal has been made by Members of Congress, by members of the State legislature, and by other public men interested in the activities of the Federal Government, and they have all recognized the principal needs of the Frankford Arsenal and appreciated the necessity of making appropriations to meet these needs. Certain members of the State legislature were so impressed by the necessity of making appropriations to the Frankford Arsenal that through their efforts joint resolutions were passed by the State legislature and signed by the governor, requesting the members of Congress from Pennsylvania to exercise their best efforts toward securing appropriations for the purchase of an adjoining tract of land and for the construction of a high explosive loading shop.

The principal needs of the Frankford Arsenal are described below, but the language employed, while convincing, can not possibly impress the reader as would a personal inspection of the establishment.

1. INCREASED FACILITIES FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF ARTILLERY AMMUNITION.

The extent of the orders for the manufacture of artillery ammunition involves the employment continuously of two shifts, and on certain operations three shifts, in order to complete the order by the time specified by the War Department. It is generally considered that a plant at a manufacturing arsenal is inadequate when it is necessary to employ more than one shift except in time of war. A plant which requires the employment of extra shifts in time of peace to provide for the orders given is obviously inadequate in time of war.

The manufacturing facilities at the Frankford Arsenal can be greatly increased by converting the present carpenter shop and the lumber shed into shop buildings for manufacturing artillery ammunition, these buildings being located very conveniently for the purpose. The utilization of these buildings would, of course, mean the construction of a carpenter shop and lumber shed which can easily be done on ground available for the purpose. The construction of a new carpenter shop and lumber shed, the extension of the present carpenter shop and alteration of the lumber shed would involve an expenditure of about $95,000. A high explosive loading shop is required at an expenditure of about $82,000, and a fireproof artillery ammunition storehouse at a cost of about $17,500, making a total cost for construction of about $139,500. Additional machinery should be provided for to increase the output of the ammunition for the larger field cannon, and $200,000 should be provided for at the same time for the necessary machinery to enlarge the output. This would make the total amount to be appropriated about $340,000. While this is a comparatively large sum, yet it is only slightly more than the loss that the Government has made on the existing orders given outside contractors for artillery ammunition, namely, $312,214.84.

2. THE ACQUIREMENT OF ABOUT 25 ACRES OF LAND ADJOINING THE ARSENAL.

This land is now undeveloped property and is on the market for sale, proceeds thereof to go to the University of Pennsylvania. Its acquisition is desirable for the locating of the magazines which are now too close to the shop buildings; for the construction of magazines for the storage of explosive ammunition which is now required to be shipped to Picatinny Arsenal, at a cost of about $18,000 per annum; and to prevent it falling in the hands of parties who may utilize the tract for the construction of dwelling houses. In the latter case experimental work which is now being done at the arsenal by way of firing will probably be a matter of complaint by the residents and lead to the curtailment of the activities of the arsenal. The cost of the land should be about $154,000.

3. FIRE PROTECTION, ETC.

While the above are considered the principal needs of the Frankford Arsenal, there are other minor needs which are very urgent, such as increased fire protection, construction of embankment about an exposed magazine, and an extension of the metal storehouse for the reception of valuable scrap which is now stored in the open on platforms. These needs would cost about $38,500.

4. OTHER PROJECTS.

There are other needs which are not quite so urgent at the present time, such as a new office building, to cost $75,000. The present building is now so congested that the clerical work is now being done in this building and in two other storehouses. The proposed building would provide for all the clerical and drafting work at the arsenal. The Frankford Arsenal is much behind other leading manufacturing establishments in not providing adequate facilities for the comfort of its employees. A storehouse has been under consideration, at a cost of $45,000, in which would be reserved a floor wherein the young women employed at the arsenal could have their luncheons and also utilize it for recreation purposes during the noon recess. Old materials at the arsenal are overhauled by employees in a basement, which should not be utilized for this purpose.

The sidewalks about the west side of the arsenal have been condemned by the city of Philadelphia, but the arsenal is without funds to repair them. The inclosing wall along part of the arsenal is ready to fall, and the sidewalk along this wall is so narrow that at places two persons can not pass each other. The inclosing wall should be rebuilt and the sidewalk widened approximately 5 feet. Part of the sidewalk on the north side of the arsenal is an ordinary dirt one. The exterior of the arsenal, a Federal institution, does not bespeak well of its ownership. These exterior improvements could be made at a cost of about $11,000 to $12,000.

Public men visiting the arsenal have been informed that the frame structures in which are housed the chemical laboratory, electrical shop, plumbing shop, and printing shop were condemned by the Inspector General's Department of the Army several years ago. A fireproof building could be constructed for about $50,000 which would house these various shops.

5. IF AT PANAMA, WHY NOT HERE?

The public have generally appreciated the splendid work which has been done by the Federal Government in conserving the health of its employees engaged in the construction of the Panama Canal by the elimination of mosquitoes, while nothing has been done at the Frankford Arsenal toward filling in the low places, which are nothing but breeding spots for mosquitoes. Such low places at the arsenal are gradually being filled in by refuse from the arsenal, but it will take a great many years to accomplish the result. It is believed that all low places should be filled in with as little delay as possible, so that there will be, at least, no swampy land on the reservation.

The Tariff.

SPEECH
HON. CHARLES L. BARTLETT, OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, September 30, 1913.

The House had under consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes I have not the time to and I can not discuss the bill or the conference report, but I wish to say I have no doubt in my mind that this bill will not seriously affect legitimate business, and I do not believe the manufacturers of this country should have any fears that the bill will seriously affect them or their legitimate business. I hold in my hand a clipping from the New York Herald of a few days ago, which states that some 60 manufacturers in the country have organized and will send abroad their agents for the purpose of carrying their goods into Japan, India, China, and all the countries where there is so much of cheap labor, and as this bill is to become a law before this week shall pass, then under this law they will be sending their goods to compete with the cheap labor of these countries and with every other country in the world. I shall put that statement in the RECORD, and also an editorial which appeared in the New York World in the issue of to-day upon the subject of this bill.

[From the New York Herald.]

AMERICAN GOODS TO CIRCLE GLOBE—60 MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENTS TO SEND 10 SALESMEN AROUND WORLD ON 2 YEARS' TRIP.

A world tour in the interest of trade expansion will start from this city next month when representatives of 60 manufacturing establishments in the United States, a large number of them from New York, Philadelphia, and cities East and West, will carry American goods around the world in an effort to introduce goods direct from manufacturer to buyer.

This does not mean that there will be 60 men in the party, but a party of 10 salesmen will represent all the interests in the organized expedition, whose object will be to put goods of American manufacture on a fair competitive basis with those of other countries.

The tour includes Cape Town, the first stop; then India, the Straits Settlements, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, China, Japan, Hawaii, Central America, both coasts of South America, and back home by way of Cuba. It is expected that the tour will last two years.

The movement was proposed by the Smythfield Export Co., of Philadelphia, and was quickly subscribed to by several New York manufacturers and those of other cities. It will be in charge of Otto Kafka, who has wide experience in the export business and is especially fitted for the work. He is organizing 10 sales managers, each in charge of 6 lines of goods. They will carry a full line of samples.

When a foreign country is reached the party will open quarters in the larger cities and at once get in touch with the merchants and buyers of the place, learn what the people want, show the samples carried, and if these do not suit arrange to get what they want, the same as any New York salesman going into a city in this country to dispose of his wares.

If the field looks good at each point an agency will be opened in charge of a native of that country. He will be left to take orders on actual samples, with which he will be supplied direct from this country. The Americans will open the country to the American goods, and it will then be the business of the native manager to hold the trade.

Goods will be ordered directly from the manufacturers who produce the particular lines wanted. In effect the buyer will deal with the producer. The export houses will figure only as their facilities may be desired in handling goods and making settlements, for which they will get 2½ per cent commission.

The idea is believed to give effect to true economic principles, and it will substantially eliminate the export houses, with their double commissions, at least so far as the foreign business of those manufacturers who join in the special movement is concerned.

THE END OF EXTORTION.

When the tariff bill as agreed upon by the conference committee of the two branches of Congress was reported to the House yesterday a great and patriotic task was virtually completed. A memorable record was made. A precedent never to be forgotten was established.

For the first time since the Civil War an honest general revision of the tariff downward, often promised by leading men of all parties, had been agreed upon. For the first time since protection for monopoly's sake had become an institution seemingly invincible greed and corruption had been met on their own ground and vanquished. For the first time since public plunderers sought refuge in the United States Senate a tariff measure emerged from that body fairer and wiser and lower than it was received from the House.

The new tariff defeats not only the organized rapacity of those who have long controlled such enactments, it overcomes also the threats of the panic breeders and the falsehoods of the hired claquers who for a generation or more terrorized people and Congress. It becomes a law with Republican as well as Democratic support. It is welcomed even by the very interests which for years bludgeoned those who suggested a similar enactment.

When our tariffs for extortion averaged nearly 50 per cent on the value of our dutiable imports, a suggestion of the smallest reduction was met by cries of "free trade." The act now completed reduces the average of taxation at the customhouses to one-half the rates that were once deemed necessary, but it is more truly a measure of protection than any law which the combined corruptionists of the past bought with money and favor.

This law was written in behalf of the people. It taxes wealth, indulgence, luxury. It frees many of the necessaries of life. It is intended to give consumers cheaper goods, or better goods for the same money. It relieves manufacturers by untaxing raw materials. It promotes honesty in trade. It removes the support of Government only from the hopelessly inefficient and dependent.

Nearly a century ago, when Henry Clay introduced what he called "the American system" to the people, his idea of sufficient protection for American labor was embodied in a tariff of 20 per cent. We have had tariffs for monopoly since that time of more than twice that figure. We are now to have a tariff reformed after years of struggle, after years of oppression, after years of deception, intimidation, and corruption, that safeguards labor on the one hand and does not rob it on the other.

While the economic question involved has hardly been touched, the moral triumph that has been won is complete. The thanks of the country are due to every Member of Congress, Republican and Democrat, who has contributed to this result; but especially to be honored are Representative UNDERWOOD, Senator SIMMONS, and President Wilson, without whose untiring labors, wisdom, and moderation the happy issue now at hand might have been impossible.

I did not rise so much to discuss the provisions contained in the tariff bill and the results we believe will follow as I did to discuss an amendment as to which there is disagreement between the two Houses, said amendment being known as the Clarke amendment. I shall vote against the Clarke amendment.

I have on various occasions in this House expressed my views on the subject of the tariff. I believe that a new era of independence for both the manufacturer and for the consumer will be ushered in under this bill when it becomes a law.

Congress can, in my judgment, control these illegitimate transactions, like gambling in cotton futures, by the same means it suppressed the lottery business, by denying the use of the mails and the telegraph to those engaged in the business; besides, the States can by appropriate legislation prohibit it. That the States have full power over the subject, I quote the following from the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ware & Leland v. Mobile (209 U. S.):

The sole question here presented is whether the statute in question is an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, for if the plaintiffs in error are shown by the foregoing agreed facts to be engaged in interstate commerce, then the statute is void, as an attempt by a State to regulate the commerce which the Constitution of the United States places within the exclusive control of Federal authority.

Interstate commerce must be such as takes place between States as differentiated from commerce wholly within a State. It must have reference to interstate trade or dealing, and if the regulation is not such, and comprehends only commerce which is internal, the State may legislate concerning it. In each case the recurring question is, On which side of the line does the commerce under investigation fall? * * *

But how stands the present case upon the facts stipulated? The appellants are brokers who take orders and transmit them to other States for the purchase and sale of grain or cotton upon speculation. They are in no just sense common carriers of messages, as are telegraph companies. For that part of the transactions, merely speculative and followed by no actual delivery, it can not be fairly contended that such contracts are the subject of interstate commerce; and concerning such of the contracts for purchases for future delivery as result in actual delivery of the grain or cotton, the stipulated facts show that when the orders transmitted are received in the foreign State the property is bought in that State and there held for the purchaser.

The transaction was thus closed by a contract completed and executed in the foreign State, although the orders were received from another State. When the delivery was upon a contract of sale made by the broker, the seller was at liberty to acquire the cotton in the market where the delivery was required or elsewhere. He did not contract to ship it from one State to the place of delivery in another State. And though it is stipulated that shipments were made from Alabama to the foreign State in some instances, that was not because of any contractual obligation so to do. In neither class of contracts, for sale or purchase, was there necessarily any movement of commodities in interstate traffic because of the contracts made by the brokers.

These contracts are not, therefore, the subjects of interstate commerce any more than in the insurance cases, where the policies are ordered and delivered in another State than that of the residence and office of the company. The delivery, when one was made, was not because of any contract obliging an interstate shipment, and the fact that the purchaser might thereafter transmit the subject matter of purchase by means of interstate carriage did not make the contracts as made and executed the subjects of interstate commerce.

From this decision it seems clear there is no necessity that Congress should resort to this doubtful constitutional power to use the taxing power to destroy.

I am opposed to this amendment and this method of legislation. In all the service that I have rendered in this House I have never found occasion when I was willing to use the taxing power of this Government in order to destroy any legitimate business. I do not believe that the Constitution of our country authorized the use of this great power of the Government either to destroy or to build up the business of a citizen, nor am I willing, Mr. Speaker, to violate the Constitution, in my opinion, and invade reserved powers of the States of this Union and say what sort of contracts the citizens of those States shall enter into. I do not believe the power exists either to use to destroy an industry or a business or to regulate a business within the confines of a State. Mr. Speaker, believing this to be true, I shall vote against the Clarke amendment. I realize some of the great evils that exist by reason of the methods that have been pursued upon the stock exchange of New York and elsewhere. I have upon occasions voted for a bill which kept from the mails and from the use of the telegraph communications relating to those contracts which were purely gambling contracts, but however great the evil may be, I have never yet in my experience as a Member on the floor of this House favored either the use of the power of the Government to tax a business out of existence or the use of the power of the Government to unconstitutionally invade the rights and the privileges of the States to regulate within their borders the business that is purely and legitimately within the control of the legislatures of those States. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care further to detain the House upon this subject. To undertake to do so and to give in detail the reasons I have with reference to this amendment, why I oppose it, what my views would be with reference to correcting the evil, would take more time than I have at my command, and I have simply risen in order that I might not be misunderstood when I vote against this amendment or when I vote to maintain and support, as I have always endeavored to do, the Constitution of the United States and not to stretch the power of Congress and invade the reserved rights of the States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The A B C of the Panama Canal Tolls Controversy.

OF

HON. THETUS W. SIMS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 29, 1913.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article, by Henry Herzberg, which is published in the Baltimore Evening Sun of October 15, 1913. The article is as follows:

[From the Baltimore Evening Sun, Wednesday, October 15, 1913.]

THE A B C OF THE PANAMA CANAL TOLLS CONTROVERSY.

(By Henry Herzberg.)

The refusal of England to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exposition to be held at San Francisco once more excites public interest in the pending issues between Great Britain and the United States.

The primal question involved in the present controversy with Great Britain is not concerned with the elementary right of the United States to grant a subsidy to its own vessels or whether the United States is estopped from regulating its domestic commerce. The dispute rests upon the pivot whether the Panama Canal act of August, 1912, impinges upon the rights of Great Britain and other nations in respect to the use of the canal as stipulated in our treaties.

The regulation of tolls and the conditions governing traffic through the canal is not a political or an economic problem of domestic origin which only indirectly affects foreign nations; but, on the contrary, it is an international controversy developed from our control of the canal property, the titular sovereignty of which still inheres in Panama; and while the question presented is abstractly a purely economic one, yet its settlement depends upon the interpretation of treaty rights and obligations.

Are we unmindful of the fact that the actual building of the canal was conditioned upon England's surrender of a valuable privilege?

In his masterly presentation of this subject in the Senate Senator ROOT, with learning and candor, penetrated the very fiber of the present dispute. He showed the evolution of the building of the canal by tracing the origin of our various treaties bearing upon trans-Isthmian communication. In his analysis Senator ROOT pointed out the fact that when the United States turned its attention to the possibilities of a ship canal it found Great Britain held the place of vantage or practically controlled the eastern end of the Nicaragua route, upon which all minds were concentrated. The United States then sought a treaty with Great Britain by which England would renounce the advantage she had acquired and admit the United States to equal participation with her in the control and protection of a canal across the Isthmus. From these negotiations there arose the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was ratified by Great Britain "as a concession to the urgent demands of the United States," says Senator ROOT, who incidentally remarks that Mr. Clayton held two unratified treaties with Nicaragua as a whip over the British negotiators.

The force of this contention is realized at this time, when the Wilson administration is reviving the Knox treaty, whereby Nicaragua would give to the United States in perpetuity the exclusive right of way for an interoceanic canal across Nicaraguan territory, a permanent lease for a naval station on the Pacific side of Fonseca Bay, and permanent occupation of certain small islands off the Nicaraguan coast. In consideration of these grants the United States is to pay $3,000,000, which Nicaragua will expend on certain designated improvements.

Under the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty Great Britain gave up its rights under the protectorate over the Mosquito coast and also relinquished its rights to what was commonly supposed would be the eastern terminus of the canal, while the United States sacrificed nothing.

In order to build and control the canal the United States made negotiations with Great Britain to supersede the treaty of 1850 by an engagement that would free us from our treaty obligations which bound us not to obtain or maintain exclusive control over a ship canal across the Isthmus. In 1901 ratifications were exchanged and the Hay-Pauncefote treaty became operative. This treaty, while it superseded the earlier convention of 1850, yet implied the nonfortification of the canal and specifically provided that the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing the rules prescribed for its operation on terms of entire equality, to the end that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or the citizens or subjects thereof in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. It was stipulated, further, that such conditions and charges shall be just and equitable.

The purpose of the construction of the artificial waterway was to facilitate the free movement of the world's commerce and to improve distributive processes by shortening existing trade routes. Our own national interests were to be identical with the world's interests. The commerce of all nations was to be treated on an absolute equality and in harmony with our treaty guaranties, and no discrimination against or in favor of any nation or any national group was allowable.

If the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 had not been superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, neither Great Britain nor the United States could have constructed or have obtained the exclusive control of the canal. But if the waterway had been built by others while the earlier treaty was in force, it would have been open to British and United States ships on equal terms, and the tolls leviable on such ships would have been identical. The purpose of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, as Sir Edward Grey declares, was to recover our freedom of action and obtain the right which the United States had surrendered to construct the canal ourselves. "But the complete liberty of action," avers the English diplomat, "consequential upon such construction was to be limited by the maintenance of the general principle embodied in article 8 of the earlier treaty." The "general principle" of neutralization as stipulated in the Clayton-Bulwer engagement was reasserted in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and the basis of this neutralization was the rules embodied in the Constantinople convention. The purpose of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was to facilitate the construction of the canal under the auspices of the United States by removing the prohibitions contained in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. This is clearly set forth in the provisions of the treaty of 1901, which plainly and emphatically free the United States from its pledge made in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 not to control the canal. On the other hand, Great Britain is not relieved of her obligations made in that instrument to forego ownership and exclusive control of a canal across the Isthmus.

The United States then acquired the right of construction and control and Great Britain acquiesced in the abrogation of the prohibition contained in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and in consideration of the acquirement of this right the United States bound itself to treat the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations exactly the same—that is, without discrimination, preference, or special privileges. In other words, the management and control of the canal rests with the United States, subject to the qualifications that the vessels both of war and of commerce of all nations should be placed on a parity and treated with absolute equality. This is the unequivocal meaning of the provision in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty reasserting the "general prineiple" of neutralization as established in article 8 of the superseded Clayton-Bulwer convention and as embodied in the Constantinople agreement of October 29, 1888.

M. Philippe Bunau-Varilla, who as representative of the Republic of Panama signed the Panama treaty, holds that the basic law of the operation of the canal reposes in the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty and not in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Whether or not this claim is well founded, it must be allowed that the title or deed of the canal strip was conveyed to the United States by the instrument of the Panama treaty even as the previous right of the United States to construct the waterway was acquired by the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

"The terms of the Panama treaty," said Secretary of War Taft in 1906, "are peculiar in not conferring sovereignty directly upon the United States but in giving to the United States the powers which it would have if it were sovereign." Our rights on the Isthmus respecting the canal issue from the treaty with Panama of November 18, 1903, and these rights, according to every canon of decency and fair play, are subject to the express provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

The truth is that Panama granted to the United States rights, power, and authority over the Canal Zone, so far as the construction and control of the waterway is concerned; that is, we acquired rights to build and maintain a canal under the express terms of a treaty. While we have the sole right to the possession of the canal and the exclusive right to operate it, the titular sovereignty remains in Panama. Moreover, our treaty engagement with Panama is in the nature of a concession, for which we are obligated to pay $250,000 annually, beginning nine years after the ratification of the treaty. This contract scarcely supports the claim of an absolute sovereignty on the Isthmus. Though the new Republic was in a more delicate position with reference to its sovereignty than was Colombia, yet Panama, technically at least, refused to part with its sovereignty absolutely.

But the question is immaterial whether or not sovereignty is lodged actually with the United States, because the Hay-Pauncefote treaty specifically provides for a change of sovereignty in the following language:

"No change of territorial sovereignty or of the international relations of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty."

The United States does not possess rights on the Isthmus superior to the provisions of our treaties. Our rights are strictly treaty rights and are subject to contractual provisions. For practical purposes only may the United States exercise the rights of sovereignty over the Canal Zone. The titular sovereignty still inheres in the Panama Government. The practical purposes consist in the building and operation of the canal. The United States exercises or should exercise sovereignty only so far as it may be necessary to make the canal workable, something like the exercise of the sovereign rights of eminent domain by railroads in order to make the carrier system operative. Since the rights which the United States possess in the canal tract arise from the fountain of treaty provisions, we can not divorce ourselves from the obligations which spring from those treaty rights and regulate canal traffic in the same way that we control the strictly domestic and internal commerce of the United States. If it had been our purpose to discriminate in favor of our coastwise shipping, we should have striven by a straightforward course to reserve this right by an express stipulation to that effect.

Our officials, doubtless, were aware that the building of the canal would not have been actualized if we had insisted upon the application of a domestic policy to the canal traffic.

When the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty was considered in the Senate, Senator Bard, of California, sought to amend the treaty by specifically providing for the right to discriminate in favor of our coasting trade. This amendment, which was defeated by a vote of 27 to 43, indicated the disposition of the Senate not to depart from our historic policy to treat the vessels of all nations with absolute equality.

But now, when the waterway is nearing completion, we have the temerity to do by indirection that which we would not propose even by direct negotiation before we had the right to construct the canal.

It is clear, then, that preferential treatment accorded our coastwise vessels commits violence upon our treaties and is therefore not a bona fide transaction, but is mala fide—a breach of national faith.

But it is urged that the United States owns, controls, and has paid for the canal and yet is restricted by treaty from aiding its own commerce in the way that all other nations of the world may do freely in the exercise of their sovereignty.

It can be demonstrated that this is a superficial view which is unsupported by actual facts and conditions.

In her note of protest of November 14, 1912, Great Britain, through Sir Edward Grey, made it plainly understood that the remission of tolls or their payment by our Government would not be objectionable if the remitted moneys would not fall as an additional burden upon the world's shipping using the canal. In other words, our treaty obligations clearly exact that all nations of the world shall receive equal treatment in the use of the transisthmian waterway, and therefore it follows that our vessels must bear their proportional share of the burden of the canal's maintenance.

The United States, then, is within its rights if in granting a subsidy to its own vessels it does not levy the amount of such subsidy directly or indirectly on the foreign shipping of other nations.

Sir Edward Grey properly maintains that we are debarred from granting a subsidy if the method chosen for granting such subsidy has the effect of imposing upon British or other shipping an unfair share of the upkeep of the canal.

The contention of Great Britain is well grounded that the Panama Canal act is discriminatory, because the exemption of our coastwise vessels from any contribution to the operating cost of the canal and to the interest charge imposes upon foreign ships the payment of more than their just proportionate share. Our special commissioner, Prof. Emory E. Johnson, in his exhaustive report, has shown that if tolls were levied equally upon American and foreign vessels it might be possible to make the canal self-supporting in a decade, but he declared that it would not be possible to secure from foreign shipping alone ample revenues to make the canal pay for its own upkeep.

The United States shames its former pretensions for equal and equitable treatment, and not only refuses to rescind its action, which casts aspersion upon its honor, but scorns the reference to arbitration as suggested by Sir Edward Grey in his note.

It should be recalled that the United States has ratified 25 treaties of arbitration with the leading nations of the world. These engagements run for a period of five years, and for the most part are coterminous. The United States now not only disregards the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and refuses to arbitrate the questions of tolls, but allows the arbitration treaty of 1908 to lapse without renewal. Does not this action imperil the world's structure of arbitration? The treaty of 1908 with Great Britain provides that controversies or differences of a legal character and affecting the interpretation of treaties which fail to yield to diplomatic adjustments shall be arbitrated if the questions at issue do not concern the independence, vital interests, or honor of the contracting States and do not concern the interests of third parties. Now, it would seem that the Panama Canal tolls question is within the purview of this treaty and is arbitrable, since in a political sense it does not affect the independence, vital interests, or honor of the contracting parties, though it may concern the interests of third parties.

But a course more honorable even than arbitration would be to repeal the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act. Such action would avoid the denial of solemn asseverations made in our treaties with New Granada (Colombia) in 1846, with Great Britain in 1850 and 1901, with Nicaragua and with Panama in 1903, and, further, would reenforce the moral primacy which the United States has held as the supporter of neutral rights throughout the world. By submitting the tolls controversy to a judicial tribunal the United States would preserve our self-respect and at the same time promote the cause of arbitration. The repeal of the law, however, would be more salutary, because such action not only would redound to the national honor, but also would foster the ends of international justice.

How fatuous is a policy that causes a breach of the national faith and quickens the avarice of a class to which the Government already has dispensed an enervating legal monopoly. But even if the toll-exemption provision did not involve the blight of subsidy and actually would benefit the American shipper and consumer, the United States could not make such exemption in favor of its own shipping consistent with national honor. We are precluded from such a course by the most sacred treaty obligations, which bind us not to discriminate against the world's shipping and carrying interests in respect to conditions and charges affecting canal traffic.

To deny the arbitration of the controversy or to refuse to repeal the law, which is as offensive to the American sense of equity as it is to British judgment, would be to enthrone the pocket greed of a group above the finer elements of national righteousness.

Criminal Aliens.

OF

HON. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 29, 1913.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to introduce in the House a bill amending the immigration laws of the United States, providing for the deportation of criminals who are now in prison or may in the future be sentenced to imprisonment, and who are unnaturalized and therefore not citizens of our country, but of the country from whence they came.

There are a number of reasons why the bill amending the immigration laws should pass, and the following are a few of them:

First. The rapidly increasing percentage of alien prisoners, particularly in States adjacent to foreign lands or along the coasts.

Second. The increasing burden to the taxpayers in supporting the institutions for the incarceration of these aliens and the support of their dependents who are in charitable institutions.

Third. The burden on the taxpayers for additional police protection, as most of these aliens when discharged continue their criminal career.

Fourth. The passage of House bill 5598 will cause more aliens coming into the country to become naturalized citizens, and therefore have more respect for our laws.

I have been trying to gather statistics as to the exact number of criminals in prison who would be deported under this bill if it becomes a law, but have found it impossible to secure general statistics later than 1908, when the Commissioner General of Immigration found there were in prison in the United States

23,050 foreign-born prisoners, of whom 7,920 were naturalized and 15,130 still aliens. As the total number in prison at that time was 148,550, it will be seen that over 10 per cent were aliens.

It is possible, however, to get local data of more interest. Take New York State, for instance: In the report of the superintendent of State prisons for 1909 there is a special section devoted to foreign-born and alien prisoners. It reads as follows:

FOREIGN-BORN AND ALIEN PRISONERS.

While it is impossible to definitely determine all of the causes that have contributed to the recent remarkable increase in prison population, comparison of the nativity tables in the reports for 1906 with those of 1909 proves quite conclusively that the crowded condition of our prisons is largely due to the influx of immigrants into this State during the last few years

A census of the 4,320 prisoners in Sing Sing, Auburn, and Clinton Prisons on September 30, 1909, was as follows:

	Number of prisoners.	Per cent.
Natives of New York State	1,830	43
Natives of other States	878	20
Natives of foreign countries, citizens of United States	521	12
Natives of foreign countries, aliens	1,091	25
Total	4,320	100

It will be seen that without the alien prisoners the 3,600 cells in our present prisons would afford ample quarters for the population. At great cost and inconvenience the State is maintaining and endeavoring to educate, train, and rehabilitate 1,091 men who are subjects of foreign countries, most of whom have but recently come to the United States and all of whom are by reason of conviction of felonies forever debarred from citizenship.

From 1906 to 1909 the population of Sing Sing, Auburn, and Clinton prisons increased 939.

Of this increase 505 prisoners, or 53.3 per cent, were foreign born.

While natives of 33 countries were represented in the alien population shown in the foregoing table, 73 per cent of the whole number were contributed by 4 nations, to wit:

	Number.	Per cent.
Austria	77	7
Germany	109	10
Italy	473	43
Russia	138	13
Total	797	73

Of the 19 condemned prisoners confined in the prisons at the close of the last fiscal year 9, or 47 per cent, were aliens. Their nativity was as follows:

Armenia	1
Germany	1
West Indies	1

It is a fact worthy of note that among the 19 condemned prisoners there was no naturalized citizen of the United States, nor do the prison records show that a naturalized citizen has been executed in this State since the electrical-execution law took effect in 1889. The total number of executions during this period was 117.

A classification of the alien prisoners as to the nature of their crimes was made in July, 1909, and is interesting as indicating the tendency of criminally inclined aliens from some countries to commit crimes against the person and of those from other countries to offend against property. The more noticeable cases are as follows:

Countries.	Against person.	Against property.	Miscellaneous.
Austria	26	58	1
China	6	0	1
Germany	29	79	3
Italy	318	94	39
Russia	29	102	2

While great numbers of immigrants who land in New York go to other States to reside, it is undoubtedly true that a large percentage of the vicious and ignorant remain in this State and make large cities their headquarters.

Thus there is forced upon New York State and upon its charitable and penal institutions more than their due proportion of the undesirable classes of immigrants—the lawless, the illiterate, and the defective.

Largely from this element has come the great alien prison population that has crowded our prisons to such an extent as to make it necessary for the legislature to provide an additional prison.

Not only are these men a menace to the lives and property of our people when at large and a great expense to them when in confinement, but as a class their presence in the prisons is a hindrance to the successful application of the reformatory, educational, and training systems there in use.

It is apparent to all that the interests of this country would best be served by the exclusion of this undesirable class of immigrants who claim and receive the protection and benefits that our form of government affords, but disregard our laws. If, however, they are to be permitted to enter our ports with no further restrictions than the present laws and system of inspection impose, is it just and equitable that the individual States in which they may chance to locate and who are powerless to exclude or deport them should be obliged to bear the expense of maintaining these criminal aliens in their penal institutions, or that the discipline of such institutions should be demoralzed and reduced in effectiveness by their presence? They are a class by themselves. Our modern methods of penal administration and control do not fit them. They should be segregated and treated as a class, and it would seem but right that the Federal Government, which permits these alien criminals to land on its shores, should assume the burden of maintaining them when they are convicted of crime, and that it should provide prisons where they may be kept by themselves and where the systems of discipline, education, and training shall be especially adapted to apply to this distinctive class of prisoners. When they have served their terms they should be deported and never allowed to return here.

As 59 per cent of the alien prisoners now in our prisons are unmarried, and less than 50 per cent of the married men have wives or children in the United States, the claim that a man should not be deported leaving a helpless family here would apply to but a few of the present alien prison population.

It may be urged that State prisoners can not be legally detained in Federal prisons. Until recently, and to some extent still, United States prisoners were kept in the penal institutions of nearly all the individual States. Only brief, simple laws were required to legalize this practice, and it would seem that similar laws would permit State prisoners to be confined in Federal prisons.

After reading this report it will be seen that the taxpayers of New York are supporting an alien population of 25 per cent in the State prisons, and that there was an increase of 33 per cent in the number of foreign-born prisoners in the three years 1906 to 1909.

There is no question as to the right of deportation, as in the case of United States ex rel Freeman v. Williams (175 Fed. Rep., p. 274), Judge Hand says:

In the case at bar there was shown ample reason to suppose that the relator was a person of habitual criminal propensities. I am satisfied, indeed, that there was extreme likelihood that he would, if he remained here, soon be concerned in crime, and, if evidence could be found, put into prison. Even while he was not imprisoned he would live at the expense of any community in which he remained. The sole question is whether the words of the statute, "likely to become a public charge," must be limited to the likelihood of his becoming a pauper. Probably this was the primary meaning of the words, but in modern times many persons have come to regard crime and pauperism as analogous facts in the life of a community and without in the least intending necessarily to impose such a sociological purpose upon the classification of Congress I believe that the statute should be reasonably construed as including, not only those persons who through misfortune can not be self-supporting, but also those who will not undertake honest pursuits and who are likely to become periodically the inmates of prisons. Literally taken, the words in question certainly cover their case. They are surely public charges, at least during the term of their incarceration. Whether they are such while they are living dishonestly, though unconvicted, it is not necessary to determine.

So to construe the act is not to decide that such persons may be convicted and punished upon loose considerations of their probable propensities. The issue is wholly of the relator's right to enter the country, and that right, as has been so often said, is entirely the creation of Congress. Nor does the construction conflict by implication with the other subdivision of section 2 which makes a ground of exclusion the conviction of crime of an immigrant alien, or his admission that he has committed a crime. That subdivision contemplates a single delinquency, but here the Secretary has concluded from the evidence that the relator's habitual propensities so dispose him to a criminal life that he will be likely to resume it.

It is true that the warrant did not specify this ground of deportation, and I find no requirement, either in the act or in the promulgated regulations, that the warrant must state the alleged grounds.

Having determined that there was one adequate ground for his conclusion I shall not consider the other points which the relator raises. It is not necessary in this view to decide whether the relator's silence upon the hearing was an admission which should be used against him. The evidence was adequate without such admission to determine that he was likely to become a public charge; nor does it appear that upon that question the admissions were used against him. I do not mean to be understood as deciding whether they should or could not be so used, that being unnecessary to the determination of this proceeding.

Writ quashed and relator remanded.

In endeavoring to secure statistics some very interesting data and suggestions were received. Otis Fuller, warden of the Michigan Reformatory, says:

Replying to your favor of June 17, your deportation bill, providing for the return of criminals to the country from whence they came, is all right except the last portion, which makes the return of a deported person a misdemeanor punishable by redeportation; whereas the wiser thing would be to make such return a felony, punishable by a penitentiary sentence of not less than 1 nor more than 10 years, followed by deportation upon completion of the prison term.

Under your proposal you will see that any person who has been deported to Canada or Mexico could return by the next train, and the Government could do nothing but send them back. It would be impossible to make such undesirables stay deported.

Your bill, however, has the right end in view, and I think it will be profitable to strengthen the laws against undesirables in every way that it is possible to do so.

We have no statistics covering the number of unnaturalized persons received at this institution during any given period. We have, however, gone through our records for the year ending June 30, 1913, and find that out of 327 men received 17 aliens had been in this country less than five years, hence must have been unnaturalized. That there were many others I have no doubt, but we have nothing to prove it. We have now in the institution waiting deportation under the present law 13 men, and during the year mentioned above 5 men were turned over to the Immigration Service by us for deportation. Several others would have been deported but for the fact that they had just passed the statute of limitations, having been in the United States over three years at the time the department got the information that they were in prison.

Anything further that we can do to aid in the amendment of the statute looking to a more stringent deportation law will be cheerfully done.

Frank L. Randall, chairman of the prison commissioners of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, has suggestions as to general immigration laws which are of interest:

Further answering your letter of June 3, which was addressed to his excellency the governor of this Commonwealth, and concerning which I wrote you briefly on June 19, I have to add the following, viz: This board of prison commissioners has the direct management of the prison at Charlestown, the reform prison at Concord Junction, the Reformatory for Women at Sherborn, and the prison camp and hospital at West Rutland. At the last-named institution all of the prisoners are received on committment from the other institutions named, or from penal institutions in this State under control of other boards than this one.

The warden of the State prison reports under date of June 19, "that there then were 324 foreign-born prisoners in that institution, of whom 40 had entered the United States within three years prior to the date of sentence and 284 have been in the United States for more than three years before their sentence." Upon our sending the report back to the warden, for the purpose of checking up the names of all foreign-born prisoners who had become naturalized before their conviction, we ascertained that there were 59 such; hence it appears by inference that there are 40 alien prisoners in State prison who have been in the United States less than three years and 225 who were in the United States more than three years prior to sentence. At the State reformatory the showing of the superintendent indicates that on June 19 of this year there were 25 prisoners who had entered the United States within three years of their sentence and 90 who had entered the United States prior to three years before their sentence. These figures of 25 and 90 from the reformatory indicate aliens only, persons having become naturalized not being taken into account in the report.

At the Reformatory for Women there were reported on June 23, 1913, to be 2 aliens who had entered the United States within three years of sentence and 22 who had entered the United States three years or more before sentence. At the same time there were reported from the prison camp and hospital 2 aliens who had entered the United States within three years of sentence and 10 who had entered the United States previous to three years before sentence. In every case the conviction was for a crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, and the sentence was to imprisonment for one year or more.

In case that we may be able to furnish you with further information you must not hesitate to call upon us for anything which you desire.

In compliance with your kind letter of June 24, I respectfully submit the following suggestions, viz, that wherever it is practicable, through the assistance of the proper authorities of the foreign country, applications for leave to enter the United States may be made to the foreign representatives of the United States at their official stations, and that the question of their eligibility or ineligibility be determined before they leave their native land for the United States. The persons thus entering the United States after a proper showing, and after receiving official leave to do so, may be met upon their arrival at the port of entry, and that further travel to their destination may be facilitated by agents of this Government, and that they may be given such advice and counsel as will tend to save them from the hands of designing imposters and false friends, and that they may receive welcome evidence in their first impression of the desire of the people of the United States to receive well disposed and healthy accessions from other countries. It seems to me that the delay which occurs in quarantine and other inspections must be a very awkward and serious thing to foreigners after their long journey to our coast, and that the inspection as now given must be very superficial and unsatisfactory.

The State of Arizona, on account of its close proximity to Mexico, is particularly interested in this matter. In answer to inquiries the following letters were received:

JUNE 10, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: I am in receipt of your letter of the 3d instant, inclosing copies of House bill No. 5598, relative to the deportation of unnaturalized criminals.

In my opinion, the provisions of your bill appear to be very desirable. For the purpose of securing for you the data which you have requested, I will refer your letter immediately to the superintendent of the State Prison of Arizona, and will ask him at the same time to provide the desired statistics at his earliest opportunity.

With great respect,

Very truly, yours, GEORGE W. P. HUNT,
Governor of Arizona.

JUNE 16, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: In accordance with the assurance which I gave you in my letter of several days ago, I inclose herewith copy of a letter received by me from Hon. R. B. Sims, superintendent of the Arizona State Prison, giving the data which you requested relative to the percentage of Arizona convicts who were unnaturalized.

Trusting that the information will prove to be of value to you, I am, with sincere esteem,

Yours, very truly, GEO. W. P. HUNT,

FLORENCE, ARIZ., June 13, 1913.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have your favor of the 10th with reference to furnishing some information for Representative GEORGE W. EDMONDS, to be used in support of his bill appertaining to the deportation of aliens who have been convicted of crime in this country.

Since this institution was established, May 20, 1875, we have had confined within the walls 2,105 people who were born in foreign countries. Of these 1,703 were born in Mexico. I regret very much that I am unable to tell you how many of these were naturalized citizens of our country, but there is nothing on the record of a man received at this institution to show whether or not he is a citizen. I believe, however, that the percentage of these men who have taken out naturalization papers is very small indeed, as the average Mexican takes no interest in such things and does not worry about civil rights.

I trust that this information will be of some interest and benefit to Mr. EDMONDS.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, R. B. SIMS, Superintendent.

The governor of Virginia, in answer to requests for statistics, wrote as follows:

I have yours of the 11th, and will at once transmit it to the superintendent of our penitentiary and ask him to reply. I think your bill an admirable one.

And the governor of South Carolina, Hon. Cole L. Blease, says:

Your letter of June 11 inclosing your immigration bill received. It seems to me your bill would make a good law, but I think you could strengthen it by providing for the stopping of all immigration, and then we would not have to be bothered with getting rid of the undesirable.

In most States records are not kept by the authorities. Therefore they can not furnish information without considerable trouble. To show, however, that the evil is not local I will give statistics from a few of the penal institutions from which I have received letters. Understand that these figures do not mean all the alien prisoners in the States, but only in the principal institutions:

Year 1913.

Illinois State Penitentiary	172
South Illinois Penitentiary	41
Montana State Prison	73
Colorado State Penitentiary	75
Nevada State Penitentiary	34
Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, 20 per cent	188
New Mexico Penitentiary	23
North Dakota Penitentiary	14
Wisconsin State Reformatory	34
Utah State Prison	35
San Quentin Prison, California	325

The letter from the Wisconsin State Prison, Rev. Daniel Woodward, warden, is of interest:

Upon the request of the Wisconsin State board of control I have directed our record clerk, Mr. Schroeder, to prepare the inclosed statement for the purpose of furnishing you with information to support your bill which is now pending in the National Congress to amend section 3 of the immigration act, which, if it should become law, will deport unnaturalized criminals after they have served a portion of their term.

I am pleased to furnish you with inclosed information, together with any additional information or support it is possible for us to furnish you from this office. I believe your bill should become law, and that it is only rational and right that foreign countries be compelled to care for their criminals and unfortunates in place of this Nation and the several States of our country bearing that large additional expense.

I do not believe inclosed statement of the record clerk is complete, in that many of our inmates do not give us all the facts when in record interview. To say the least, inclosed statement is not overdrawn, and to my best judgment understates real conditions in this institution.

I am pleased to have the privilege of supporting you in the above bill and will be pleased at any time to answer additional questions to furnish you any additional information possible.

WAUPUN, WIS., June 23, 1913.

Hon. DANIEL WOODWARD, Warden:

Relative to the attached letter from the board, in which they request certain information be given to Hon. G. W. EDMONDS, Member of Congress, regarding alien prisoners confined in this institution, will state that I have gone over our records for the past four years and find that the following number of alien prisoners were convicted and are now confined in this institution:

Alien prisoners who were convicted and sentenced to serve a term of more than one year in this institution, and who were convicted before they had been in the United States three years, total number, 25.

Alien prisoners who were convicted and sentenced to serve a term of more than one year in this institution, and who were convicted after they had been in the United States for more than three years previous to the commission of the crime for which they were sentenced, total number, 152.

Yours, very truly, G. SCHNEIDER, Record Clerk.

The letter from Texas is interesting:

Hon. G. W. EDMONDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of June 11, directed to Hon. O. B. Colquitt, governor of Texas, inquiring as to the number of unnaturalized prisoners, beg to advise that after investigating this matter as carefully as possible we find there are approximately 400 prisoners in the Texas State penitentiaries who have not become naturalized American citizens, over 300 of this number being Mexicans; others are French, German, Italian, Swedish, and British nationalities.

We presume that all of the offenses of which these prisoners were convicted involve moral turpitude as expressed in your bill.

The present prison population of Texas penitentiaries is 4,089. If there is any other information desired, we will be glad to furnish same.

Yours, very truly,

BOARD OF PRISON COMMISSIONERS,
By OSCAR F. WOLFF, Secretary.

I would particularly call the attention of the Members of the House to the information in the Rhode Island letter:

Your communication of June 11 has been referred to this board, and the following information has been received from the warden of the State prison:

Statement showing number of American and foreign inmates confined at the Rhode Island State Prison and Providence County Jail.

STATE PRISON.

American	96
Foreign	62

COUNTY JAIL.

American	191
Foreign	109

Also the following information from the agent of the State board of charities and corrections:

There is an urgent necessity for legislation authorizing the deportation of alien criminals, as each year we are adding largely from this class to our already overcrowded prison population. We trust the Edmonds amendment will prevail at this session of Congress. Our representative visited Washington and strongly urged the adoption of the Dillingham-Burton bill, not especially because of the literacy test, but for the reason that it contained a clause authorizing the deportation of alien criminals. Another important amendment is needed, to wit, the changing of the wording of section 20, so that alleged prior causes shall serve to deport insane aliens unless subsequent causes can be shown, and, further, that any of the excluded classes who shall enter the United States in violation of law and who become a public charge shall be deported at any time within five years of their landing. Our prison and jail census shows on June 1, 1913, nearly 500 inmates. Sixty per cent of this number are aliens, and 20 per cent of these aliens would be deportable under the Edmonds amendment, and the deporting of 50 alien criminals each year would represent a saving of $5,000 per annum in maintenance alone, not counting the cost of buildings.

Trust the above is what you desire; if not, would be glad to hear from you.

Very truly, yours, C. R. PARKER, Secretary.

So it will readily be seen that the evil is widespread, causing much expense and trouble to our authorities, and there does not seem to be any cure that can be suggested excepting deportation and keeping out of our country these criminals who will never become good citizens.

Segregation of the Races.

OF

HON. JAMES B. ASWELL,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 29, 1913.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I live in the South, where the negro is contented and happy. His troubles come from uninformed enthusiasts from other sections, who lead him astray. I am a friend of the negro, with whose life and character, as State superintendent of public education for many years, I became familiar and for whose industrial and elementary educational uplift I worked earnestly and constantly.

Having this first-hand information, I am deeply grieved to note by the press reports the serious and unnecessary injury done the negro race by the lack of information, the misguided energy, and the wild theories expressed at a negro church in the city of Washington on the 27th by Mr. Villard, of New York.

It is reported that he attacked the Democratic administration for the proposed segregation of the races in the District of Columbia. He seems to be shedding crocodile tears because some negro clerks in one of the departments are seated behind white clerks, many of whom are white women, and because some one in Atlanta said the negro's place is in the cornfield. He thinks that to segregate the races in the Government service is a stupid political policy. He wishes it considered a "rude and almost ruffianlike policy."

First, let me say that, in my opinion, Mr. Villard, born in a foreign country and a grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, the Abolitionist, is perfectly honest and sincere in his devotion to the negro. I have heard him speak with affectionate sympathy for the race, but his trouble is, like many other good but poorly informed, misdirected, would-be philanthropists, who try to tell us at long range how to handle the race question, he does not know what he is talking or preaching about. He simply does not know the negro. If he will spend a year in a typical negro settlement in the lower valley of the South and come into personal and intimate contact with the average negro, he will discover that the first really pressing problem to which society should devote its energy is to help the negro live decently, virtuously, and efficiently at home. He will be convinced that the rare negro, the half-breeds, and the octoroons he sees in the central and northern sections of the country do not represent the race and are an infinitesimally small fraction of it. He will learn that the day is far removed from this generation when equality with this child race in the service of this Government should be encouraged or tolerated.

After such an experience it will require 10 years of study and theorizing for Mr. Villard to square his present theories with the facts of the case. He would then not only be in favor of putting the negro clerks on the back seats, which he now complains of, but he would place them in separate buildings or, better still, have them enter the industrial fields of endeavor where the Almighty by the stamp of color decreed they should be. He should not hold the Democratic Party responsible for the wisdom of the Almighty.

Would Mr. Villard or any other white man suggest a negro being President of the United States, in the President's Cabinet, on the Supreme Bench, or a Member of the House or the Senate? The average negro himself would not suggest such an absurd proposition. Would Mr. Villard or any other good white man be willing for his sister or his daughter to marry a negro? Thus by the logic of facts the negro's position in society and in the Republic is circumscribed, graded, limited. It is, then, a question of information as to what his proper limitations should be. For negroes and whites to occupy the same worktables, the same bathrooms, and use the same towels is the beginning of social equality which the majority of the people of this country will never permit. The Government has no right to break down established social standards.

Every informed and right-thinking white man, while sympathizing with and anxious to help the negro in his place, recognizes the necessity of preserving the integrity and the supremacy of the white race. No nation ever destroyed itself, except by amalgamating with an inferior race. The United States is peculiarly commissioned to lead all other nations, not only in the purity of race-quality but in world problems of just and wise Government.

It is time for thinking people everywhere to find themselves in relation to the race problem. It is our duty to help the negro by making him proficient in his own sphere and by giving this child race a correct idea of his proper circumscribed position in society and in the Republic.

If the practice of race equality established by the Republican Party is not changed, it will result in irreparable injury to both races, and ultimately destroy the efficiency of the public service. Self-respecting proficient white men and women will be driven from the service of the Government.

But however "crude the policy" seems to Mr. Villard, segregation of the races is certain to come. Every white man, regardless of his politics, at heart believes in the segregation of the races when it affects his own family, and for every negro vote a party loses by segregation it will gain ten white votes. The dominant party of the future in the United States will be a white man's party. Will the Democrats continue their brilliant record by standing erect to meet the emergency?

Weighing of Mails.

HON. JAMES T. LLOYD,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, October 29, 1913.

Mr. LLOYD introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 5071) providing for the annual weighing of the mails.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter, in order to readjust the compensation on railroad mail routes as provided by law, the Postmaster General shall have the mails weighed simultaneously in all sections of the country annually, for not less than 30 successive working days selected by the Postmaster General, as shall represent most nearly the average weights for each annual period as shall be fair and just to both the Government and the railroads, such weights to be taken by employees of the Post Office Department, except the Postmaster General may require contractors on railroad mail routes, where practical for regularly employed force at railroad stations to weigh the mail, to have such employees take and report the weights upon forms provided and under regulations prescribed by him, all such railroad employees being sworn, and for this purpose all postmasters are hereby empowered to administer oaths on forms provided by the Postmaster General.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a bill which I have introduced, which provides for the annual weighing of mails for the purpose of ascertainment of the pay which the railroad companies should receive for carrying the mails.

This proposed bill serves to dispense with the postal train weighers and have the work done by the employees of the railroad companies instead.

In the last four-year period there were 3,260 persons employed during the weighings; this bill will authorize the Postmaster General to require the railroad companies to have their agents weigh the mails, where their regularly employed station forces can do the work, thereby saving to the Government, based upon the number of weighers in conducting the general weighing covering the whole country in the last four-year period, $1,026,900.

The second purpose of this bill is to reduce the period of weighing from 105 days to 35 days, thus reducing two-thirds the cost of the station weighers and tabulators necessary to be employed by the Government where the volume of work requires special employees, particularly in the large cities and the junction points, and where the Postmaster General, for the purpose of checking or verification, may deem it expedient to have such employees. In other words, the weighing of the mails for 35 days will only cost one-third as much for station weighers and tabulators as if the mail were weighed 105 days, as required at present.

The third achievement of this bill will be to provide an annual weighing of the mail instead of quadrennial, and thereby secure a more correct estimate of the weight of mail actually carried.

Beginning with 1867, by direction of the Postmaster General, the mails were weighed for "30 consecutive working-days," and the act of Congress, March 3, 1873, fixed the period not less than "30 successive working-days." The act of March 3, 1905, extended the weighing period to not less than "90 successive working-days."

There is but one purpose to be attained by the period of weighing, and that is an average period for the year that is fair to the Government and the railroads. It is not believed to be necessary at all that the weighing shall last 105 days, which the law fixes as the minimum, not the maximum, period.

There is no doubt that an average period of not less than 30 successive working-days can be selected by the Postmaster General, in the discretion which he has, or which could be fixed, if Congress desired, in the act itself.

The present system has caused a wasteful expenditure of public funds, because the desired result can be effectively secured by weighing for a shorter period.

The mails should be weighed simultaneously throughout the country for two main and obvious reasons, namely, to avoid duplication of weights and the paying of two railroad companies for the transportation of the same identical mail, and also to prevent duplication of Government expense for weighers at the large terminals and duplication of tabulating force.

The railroad companies weighed the mail until the act of March 3, 1875, which required that the Postmaster General have the weights taken by employees of the Post Office Department.

Under the present plan the Post Office Department employs weighers on the mail trains, station forces at large terminals and junction points where the volume of mail is heavy, and in some instances requires the postmasters to report weights on small routes.

Under the proposed plan all the weights would be taken at the railway stations or at the small places where there are no agents or at hours when agents are not on duty by the postmasters. The train weighers would be dispensed with altogether, but the Government would continue to employ the extra force necessary at the large terminals and junctions.

The weighing at stations should be more accurate than the weighing on the cars. At stations the weighing would be under stationary conditions, whereas on the trains the motion and vacillation of the car pulls the dial on the scale up and down, and exact accuracy can not well be secured.

The difficulty of weighing on the trains will be accentuated with the volume, character, shapes, and weights of parcel-post mail, some of which is not included in sacks and can not well be weighed on a spring-balance scale; particularly will this be true with the increase to 20 pounds in weight within the second zone.

There is, of course, but one purpose to be secured by the weighing, and that is the true and correct weights of the mail carried, and Congress should be solicitous that the plan provided should protect the Government on the one hand and secure to the railroad companies on the other the compensation properly due under the law.

As to the practicability of the plan, no objection could well be raised. It is self-evident that the weights could be taken at the stations of the mails put on and taken off better than on the train.

Perhaps the main question to be considered, therefore, is the policy in having the railroad agents take the weights. There might be valid objection to authorizing a plan under which the railroad companies might be required or permitted to take the weights on the trains, because in such a plan one individual on the train would take the weights on and off at the different stations, and it would be possible for that individual to carry out a plan of adding to the weights.

But under the proposed plan no such deception could be practiced. It will be apparent upon considering a practical illustration how difficult it would be to work out such a system of fraud. For example, take one of the most important mail routes in Missouri, from St. Louis to Kansas City. The weights put on and taken off would be reported by 45 intermediate agents and by Government weighers at St. Louis and Kansas City, the terminal points. In order to effect collusion it would be necessary that all these parties should be implicated, because every one of these agents and also the Government weighers at the terminals would not only have to participate in the collusion but each would have to know exactly what extent any weight padding were attempted.

This illustration shows the situation throughout the entire country. There is no possibility that 50,000 station agents and operators and other employees could, if they would, participate in conspiracies against the Government.

The railroads weigh the entire freight of the country, which is the basis for freight revenue and which amounted to $1,929,335,456 in the year ended June 30, 1911. There need be no hesitation about their weighing the mails to adjust compensation of less than 2 per cent of the gross compensation collected by the railroad companies through their agents.

But the very system itself safeguards the Government in the matter, because the railroads are paid on a basis of the daily average weights carried the length of the mail route. To secure this it is compulsory therefore that the weights taken on and the weights put off every train in each direction each day over the length of each mail route shall balance. There is therefore a self-proving automatic method, which will protect the Government and insure accuracy of weights.

In addition, the railroad agents are required to be sworn, and as a further precaution, although not provided for in the proposed law, the Postmaster General could require, under the broad authority to issue instructions to govern the weighing, such supervision by the postmasters at each one of these stations as might be deemed expedient or necessary.

The plan of weighing has been worked out, with a view to eliminate in a practical way the great expense of conducting mail weighing under existing law. The plan is safe, practical, and efficient, and would greatly reduce the cost of ascertaining the weights of mail.

During the last four years there were employed 3,260 weighers for 105 days, at $3 per day each, a total cost of $1,026,900.

There were employed 840 station weighers for 105 days, at $2.50 each, $211,050.

There were also employed 372 tabulators for 105 days, at $3 per day, $117,180.

A total cost of $1,355,130; an average annual cost of $338,702.50.

Under the proposed law the train weighers would be eliminated; station weighers would be employed only 35 days, which would cost $70,350.

Tabulators would be employed for 35 days and would cost $39,060, a total annual cost of $109,410, or less than one-third the present cost.

I submit this statement for the consideration of the membership and hope the proposed scheme will be fully investigated. I am sure that it is the most effective and economical plan that has yet been suggested.

The Banking and Currency Bill.

OF

HON. COURTNEY W. HAMLIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 1, 1913.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, on one occasion Paul referred to himself as an apostle "born out of season." I have sought this opportunity to raise my voice in indorsement of what is known as the administration measures somewhat out of season, but I deem it a sufficient apology to remind the House that during the time you were considering the currency bill I was at home watching anxiously at the bedside of our daughter, who was critically ill of typhoid fever.

I regretted very much, indeed, that I could not be here to participate in its consideration and to have the pleasure of voting for that bill. I am, however, consoled by the fact that my vote was not needed, for it received a majority in this House of 201 votes, many Republicans very wisely voting for it. I will not attempt to discuss that bill now, inasmuch as it is being considered by another branch of this Congress, but I will say that I am convinced that the rank and file, men of all classes of business outside of the big business interests, who have given attention to this measure are in favor of its speedy enactment into law. And I am also quite sure that men of all parties engaged in all kinds of business throughout the country districts are anxious for a speedy passage of some currency measure.

Another thing I am thoroughly convinced of is that the people have confidence in the President. They not only believe that he is capable to deal with these great questions, but they believe that he is the friend of all the people and that he has the courage to stand firm for what he believes to be right.

Mr. Speaker, why should not the people have faith in President Wilson? No President, I dare say, in the lifetime of the oldest man has had so many vexatious and tremendously important questions to deal with as has our President. He has met all these great propositions with a directness, firmness, and intelligence that has won the faith and love of the people of our own country and challenged the admiration of the world. Our political foes started out with the idea that he was only a schoolteacher, unlearned in statecraft, and would therefore be unable to keep up with the procession. Now they have shifted sail and complain that he leads, dictates, and by sheer force compels Congress, against its will, to enact certain legislation.

Mr. Speaker, neither of these statements are accurate—certainly not the first—and if it could fairly be said that he forces Congress to enact a tariff and currency law he would only be insisting on us doing what he and his party promised the people we would do. Certainly Democrats ought not to complain if the President insists that we keep our promises to the people. Neither ought our Republican friends complain at the enactment of this wise and salutary legislation, for it will, like the rain, inure to their benefit as well as ours. Of course I know that the idea of a political party keeping its promises to the people is something new and novel to our Republican friends. They never did it while in power, but we are doing it, and we are going to continue to do it, at least while Woodrow Wilson is in the White House, and our friends across the aisle may as well get used to it. Like Uncle Tommy Maxwell's horse, when harness with a crupper was first put on, it objected to the crupper. Uncle Tommy said to the horse, "Whoa, Bill; you'll have to stand it; it is a part of it." Keeping our promises are a part of our program, and you Republicans will have to stand it. You complain that the President dominates and controls the majority in Congress. When you were in the majority big business controlled you. You promised the people in the 1908 campaign a revision of the tariff downward. Big business forced you to revise it upward. You promised the people currency legislation. Big business forced you to ignore that promise.

We promised the people in the 1912 campaign that if intrusted with power we would revise the tariff downward and enact a graduated income-tax law so as to make the wealth of the country pay its just share of the taxes, revise the currency laws of the country, give the Philippines their independence as soon as practicable, and so forth. We had four years in which to redeem these promises; but within the first six months from the time we went into power we had completely redeemed two of these promises and have the other two well under way for speedy fulfillment. Did any party ever make so splendid a record? Do you wonder that the country has faith in Woodrow Wilson?

We have accomplished more already in this extra session for the good of the country than the Republicans ever accomplished in any one Congress in the last 50 years, and yet for political effect they pretend to complain because the House is in virtual recess now waiting on the Senate.

My Republican friends, "lest we forget," let us go back just four short years to the extra session of 1909, when you were in control of the Government. You undertook to revise the tariff. I know it is almost cruel to even call attention to the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. It is dead, dead, dead—Glory be! But let us take a look into the official record and see what you did while the Senate was considering that bill. The House passed that bill on April 9. It never came back to the House until July 30.

During that 3 months and 21 days the House was in session as follows:

Monday, April 12, in session 2 hours and 15 minutes.
Thursday, April 15, in session 10 minutes.
Monday, April 19, in session 10 minutes.

Monday, May 24, in session 5 minutes.
Thursday, May 27, in session 2 hours and 27 minutes.
Friday, May 28, in session 4 hours and 26 minutes.
Tuesday, June 1, in session 2 hours and 10 minutes.
Thursday, June 3, in session 13 minutes.

Thursday, July 15, in session 5 hours and 22 minutes.
Tuesday, July 20, in session 5 hours and 15 minutes.
Friday, July 23, in session 5 hours and 17 minutes.
Tuesday, July 27, in session 1 hour and 5 minutes.
Thursday, July 29, in session 49 minutes.
Friday, July 30, in session 3 minutes.

Here conference report came into the House, called up by Mr. PAYNE.

Congress met 37 times in 111 days, and was in session an average of 30 minutes each session. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was one of the leaders of the majority at that time. Why did he not make the House work then?

You were so afraid that Congress might do something during those 111 days of idleness you refused to appoint the standing committees of the House, thereby rendering it impossible for work of a general nature to be done. We have appointed the committees this session, and while I am not authorized to speak for all the committees, many of them have been at work.

I know that the committee of which I am chairman has worked, and with the result that the International Banking Corporation of New York has just been held by a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury to be indebted to this Government in the sum of $111,000, which it improperly retained while acting as our fiscal agent in the collection of the Boxer War or Chinese indemnity fund.

Our Republican friends are playing politics, they think, in requiring the roll of the House to be called each day. Their purpose is to expose the Democrats who are absent; but, like the ostrich, which thinks itself hid when its head is buried in the sand, expose themselves. The roll calls show that out of 145 Republican Members there are only about 30 here to answer to their names. I wonder where the other 115 are.

I will say to our Republican friends who are clamoring for a chance to work—for political effect only—that we will soon give you plenty of opportunity to get busy.

We will doubtless give you an opportunity to help us revise the antitrust laws, immigration laws, pure food and drug act, provide for Federal aid to good roads, and numerous other things needed to keep pace with this rapidly developing country.

The Late Adolphus Busch.

OF

HON. L. C. DYER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 28, 1913.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a speech delivered by ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor Hon. Charles Nagel, at St. Louis on the 25th instant, at the funeral of the late Adolphus Busch.

The speech is as follows:

"The life of a great man, not unlike a great composition of music, appeals to and is understood by all the people. We touch the prevailing note, and with more or less understanding of the subordinate tones we appreciate and we comprehend.

"This is the meaning of this manifestation of universal sympathy in our city, in our State, in our country from border to border, and far beyond. The people who come forward from the humblest peasants to the advanced professional and commercial men and accompany the casket from Langenschwalbach, the crews of the trains on the other side and this, the people who manned the ship from cabin to the last stewardess, the people who stood assembled here on a rainy night when we returned, all felt the same sympathy in the loss of Adolphus Busch, and all of us are seeking to say the same thing.

"But that is not for this hour. It is not so much at this time that adequate words or eloquent language be found to give a fair estimate of the life of Adolphus Busch.

"In this hour the family rules, and they would have some one speak who knew and felt in the past years all that which we now would be glad to have stated.

"The real tribute to the life of Adolphus Busch will be paid in after years when judgment will come to the aid of warm sympathy to give us the outlines of his real achievements in sharper language.

"But this much may be said even now: Adolphus Busch was a giant among men. Like a descendant of one of the great, vigorous, and ancient gods, he rested among us, and with his optimism, his far-seeing vision, his undaunted courage, and his energy, he shaped the affairs of men.

"Not a great reader of books, he was acquainted with the great book of life as few men are.

"Instinctively his mind traveled the true course, received and welcomed the good message, weighed and accepted the wise counsel, and threw his tremendous influence invariably to the right side of every human conflict.

"Never a visionary, he was always an optimist who could smile away the errors of a day in the triumph and the success of a lifetime.

"He believed in the ultimate progress of the world, he believed in the ultimate good of man, and he based all his activity and all his conduct upon that belief. He dared to appeal for all he stood for and for all which is good in human nature, and that was the meaning of his success.

"He believed that the people ultimately wanted that which is right and that they were ultimately entitled to that which is right.

"This was the secret of his success, and this was the meaning of his relation to all his men and to all his associates. His relation with the men in his employ was unlike anything we knew; it was a personal relation, and if his advice and his counsel had been heeded and generally accepted our statute books would not be borne down to the humiliating confession of man's inhumanity to man.

"That was the meaning of his charity. In private he gave not to create dependents, but to set free; and in public charity he gave to encourage open-minded men and women, to set free thought and conduct, and to promote good will to all the world.

"Every gift he made and everything he did was in part his own heart and his own mind and his own soul, and that is what made the giving worth the while.

"By influence he became more than a citizen of the city of St. Louis; without title and without public station he became a national figure.

"He could go to no city or to no hamlet without being recognized and welcomed through the broad country, and his reputation traveled beyond the confines of our own country, because true and loyal to his adopted country he never surrendered sentiment, sympathy, and friendship for his native land, as no true man would.

"He endeavored by conduct and by donations to further and cement the intimate relations between the countries, confident, as he thought, that what helped one was bound to redound to the advantage of the other.

"Such was his life, strange beginnings at activity, a struggle for success, with generosity and good will for all his fellow men, and thus he fought and labored to the last.

"Even in his last days he embarked upon large enterprises, confident that the responsibility would be met by his successors. In the last declining days he sent messages of solicitude to friends from whom he had not heard; in the last days he made provision in large funds for those who had carelessly subjected themselves to the danger of being wrecked, and in the last days there came such messages, received only after death here, in which he said, in that characteristic manner of his in a marginal note to his son: 'Here is a letter from someone whom once I knew and had forgotten, who is now in distress. We must see to it that that distress is relieved. Never forget a friend.' That was his life, that was his way of doing.

"Having done these things, to the last day consistent with his own rule and his own life, knowing that the end was approaching, with words of tender devotion to the partner of his life, a rare example of helpfulness and intimate affection and devotion, with words of wise counsel and injunction to his son, his chosen successor, with all-embracing affection to all the members of his family, he sank back in his chair, closed those luminous, wonderful eyes and went to sleep with the peace of an unsuspecting child.

"We ask ourselves, Did we know him? Perhaps a few of us did, but not quite. All of us together knew him; each of us admired his frankness, his ability, his optimism, his magnetism, his sense of humor, his unconquerable devotion and loyalty to friends; altogether we felt for him as he felt for us, and we knew that he cherished the place which we have assigned to him in our own heart of hearts.

"Perhaps those who were in his immediate surroundings, and those who were associated with him in his work, were alone able to follow the working of his mind.

"There were few of them who did not at times meet the severity of his judgment; but there was none, I trust, who did not again and again feel the inspiration, the compensation of quiet approval which no man knew how to give as he did.

"In the days of his full strength and vigor Adolphus Busch was master. There was no man in all his enterprises who in any branch or phase of them was his equal.

"Not by way of power, but by superiority did he rule. But the real triumph of his life came through adversity, when the full nobility of his character was demonstrated. Most men situated as he was would have given their full strength and time to the contemplation of self.

"He displayed an energy and determination in resisting an unconquerable foe for years; and while he appreciated the service which those he had trained and those on whom he had relied for years rendered to him, he nevertheless kept abreast of all his undertakings and to the last gave directions for every step, embarked upon new enterprises, and extended his generous gifts and assistance as he had in earlier days.

"But, better than all, he showed a serene philosophy; suffering himself, he bore with patience, and extended magnanimity to those around him who had failed.

"Generous, considerate, giving back his sense of humor to every man who was privileged to come within his circle, so that in those years his family, its members, were at last given an opportunity to do for him as they had never had to before, when he, with that wonderful smile of his, that undying good nature and humor of his, bestowed upon them during those years the greatest gift of his life.

"A life going out in that fashion is a great charge for those who are left to mourn. Although embarking in new plans up to the last moment, he left his successor with great responsibility.

"As to gifts, he was his own executor. He did what he wanted to do. He enjoyed giving. He loved success, and he loved to share it with others. He has given what he leaves to those who succeed him with the privilege and the opportunity to enjoy as he had. Confiding still where the confidence had once been rigid, he intrusted to them the protection of his fortune and his fair name.

"The end has come; the light is out. The inimitable smile, the wonderful, far-away look of that eye have faded; but the remembrance of them will live; their influence will live, as the members of his family will seek and find their happiness in obedience to the unspoken injunction of the great life of Adolphus Busch."

Pending Problems in Federal Legislation.

HON. ROBERT N. PAGE,
OF NORTH CAROLINA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 1, 1913.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address of Hon. ROBERT LEE HENRY, of Texas, before the South Carolina Bar Association on January 24, 1913.

The address is as follows:

PENDING PROBLEMS IN FEDERAL LEGISLATION—ARGUMENT AGAINST INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES AND VOTING TRUSTS AND FOR PROPER REGULATION OF INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS.

Address of Hon. ROBERT LEE HENRY, of Texas, before the South Carolina Bar Association on January 24, 1913.

Mr. President and members of the South Carolina Bar Association:

The invitation to address this association is one of the greatest honors that has ever come to me during my public career, and I shall endeavor to justify your courtesies by uttering no unworthy word here to-night. For the first time coming to a State whose history is replete with patrotic deeds, statesmanship, and the fame of distinguished lawyers I am thrilled with the obligation of the hour and am not unmindful of the duties resting upon our honorable profession. In the course of my remarks there shall be no tinge of rancorous partisanship, but the times demand that I speak in candid and courageous fashion while treating the pending problems in Federal legislation, which is my theme for the evening.

Never in our history did the solution of public questions call for greater patriotism and braver speech than now. Clinging to the Constitution as fashioned and handed down by South Carolina's immortal men, in conjunction with those of her sister States, I shall deal with the great Federal issues now demanding solution in no veneered and dubious language. With that immortal instrument as my chart and guide I shall speak as one who loves his country and her institutions.

OUR ANTITRUST ACT.

Monopoly first began to prey upon the people in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Privileges of monopoly were granted by her to courtiers and servants till they became intolerable and were terminated by the wrath of the people in the enactment of the "statute of monopolies" in 1624. Our antitrust act is but the outgrowth of the spirit against monopolies which secured the passage of those ancient laws. Twenty-five years ago gigantic monopolies and conspiracies against trade in alarming proportions began to infest this country. Such types as the Standard Oil Trust, the Sugar Trust, and the Beef Trust raised their heads and began to gnaw at the vitals of commerce and trade. The people demanded their utter destruction, with no spirit looking to moderation of their ravages. In obedience to that demand, Congress passed what is known as the Sherman antitrust law, and on July 2, 1890, it was approved by Benjamin Harrison, the President.

THE SHERMAN ACT.

It has been construed in more than a hundred decisions, and the Supreme Court has held its provisions clearly constitutional. It has never been amended and should not be repealed. It can be supplemented and bettered. Every citizen should hug it to his bosom as a Magna Charta among our Federal statutes. This act came into being after months of profound study and by practically unanimous consent in the Congress of the United States. It is the Nation's will, and court and citizen should respect and uphold it.

Its origin and history are most interesting. The principles embraced in its provisions should be accredited to Senator Sherman, whatever critics may claim to the contrary, for on December 4, 1889, he introduced Senate bill No. 1, entitled "A bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production." This was the beginning of the struggle against monopoly in Federal legislation, out of which the final bill emerged after various processes of amendment. History should record the truth and set this legislation down to the credit of the Ohio statesman. And patriots of whatever persuasion should preserve and perfect it to meet the emergencies of the hour.

The original Sherman bill, in section 3, denounced violations of its provisions as a felony and provided for "imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not more than five years, or both * * * fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court." We are not to-day more extreme than Senator Sherman, and yet the trusts and monopolies have increased a thousandfold in numbers and enormity of greed since his day.

On January 14, 1890, Senator Sherman reported his bill to the Senate, and it was there considered from week to week. On March 21, 1890, he reported from the Committee on Finance a substitute for his original bill. Whereupon Senator Reagan, of Texas, offered a substitute for the Senate committee's substitute. His bill set out at great length the acts constituting a trust and conspiracy against trade, and bristled with luminous and efficient definition. It, too, denounced violations of its provisions as a felony, and in certain and comprehensive language provided penalties. The pending amendments were considered on various occasions in the Senate, and on March 25, 1890, by a vote of 30 yeas to 12 nays, the Reagan substitute was added to the Sherman bill. On March 27, 1890, the Senate again resumed consideration of the bill, and upon motion of Senator Walthall, of Mississippi, the entire subject was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE SUBSTITUTE.

On the 2d day of April, 1890, Senator Edmunds reported a substitute of eight sections for the original bill and amendments. That substitute was and is the identical Sherman law of to-day. No matter what Senator wrote this or that language in the final draft, it was, after all, the culmination of the purpose and genius of Senator Sherman, whose inspiration was to reach and strike down monopolistic spirit abroad in the land. In multifarious forms the Senate considered the substitute reported from the Judiciary Committee. It passed that body and then went to the House. It there passed with amendments and went through two conferences, which finally struck out the amendments after debate clearly revealed that the act was understood to reach transportation companies doing an interstate business, and prohibited "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations," whether "reasonable" or "unreasonable." The conference report was agreed to, and the bill passed in exact form as reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. By unanimous vote of 240 ayes the House passed the bill on June 20, 1890.

In closing the debate in the House, Mr. Stewart, of Vermont, said:

The provisions of this trust bill are just as broad, sweeping, and explicit as the English language can make them to express the power of Congress on this subject under the Constitution of the United States.

Inflexible rules of reason and logic inevitably lead to the conclusion that its very first section prohibits "every combination in restraint of interstate or international commerce."

FIGHT BY THE TRUSTS.

The law having passed and the people vindicated in their demands for such legislation, the struggle on the part of the trusts to undo the achievement began. The first conflict came in the Knight case, which was lost to the Government on account of bad pleading and mismanagement on the part of the governmental officers. Emboldened by this accidental success, the trusts increased their defiance of the national will and prepared for further conflict in attacking the law.

JUSTICE PECKHAM'S DECISION.

Next came the case of the United States against Freight Association, decided by the Supreme Court in 1896. Justice Peckham, in a luminous decision, upheld the constitutionality of the law, which was vigorously assailed by trusts and monopolies.

He said:

When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language and no exceptions or limitations can be added without placing in the act that which has been omitted by Congress.

He said further:

In other words, we are asked to read into the act by way of judicial legislation an exception that is not placed there by the lawmaking branch of the Government. * * * This we can not and ought not to do.

And in patriotic language he adds:

If the act ought to be read as contended for by defendants, Congress is the body to amend it and not the court by a process of judicial legislation wholly unjustified.

The majority of the court agreed and upheld the law as written by Congress. Justice White registered his dissent stoutly, contending that the word "unreasonable" should be interpolated immediately before the word "restraint." He courageously took his stand in 1896, and the opinion speaks for itself.

Not content with this defeat, the trusts and monopolies renewed the attack for the purpose of dismembering the law and thwarting the will of the people. In 1898 the Supreme Court decided the case of the United States against the Joint Traffic Association. Again, Justice Peckham delivering the opinion of the court, the constitutionality and validity of the statute were sustained. In emphatic language the court reaffirmed the decision in the case of the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and reasserted that the word "unreasonable" can not and must not be supplied before the word "restraint" in the act.

WHAT THE COURT SAID.

The court said:

This court with care and deliberation and also with a full appreciation of their importance again considered the questions involved in its former decision. A majority of the court once more arrived at the conclusion it had first announced, and accordingly it denied the application. And now for the third time the same arguments are employed, and the court is again asked to recant its former opinion and to decide the same question in direct opposition to the conclusion arrived at in the Trans-Missouri case. * * * As we have twice already deliberately and earnestly considered the same arguments which are now for a third time pressed upon our attention, it could hardly be expected that our opinion should now change from that already expressed.

And so in 1898 Justice White again dissented. The decisions were reaffirmed in numerous instances and became the settled rule of conduct. In 1907 the court again reaffirmed the decision in the Joint Traffic and Freight Association cases and said, in the case of the Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson (209 U. S. Rep.):

It has been decided that not only unreasonable but all direct restraints of trade are prohibited, the law being thereby distinguished from the common law.

And with emphasis the Supreme Court said in the Northern Securities case:

All contracts of that character, whether they are reasonable or unreasonable, are prohibited.

THE WORD "UNREASONABLE."

The trusts and monopolies meantime became disheartened at the action of the courts and subtly approached another forum. They came to Congress and caused a bill to be introduced supplying the word "unreasonable" where they had failed to insert it by judicial amendment. This bill was introduced at the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, in 1909. In the face of the decision of the courts, the bill proposed "that no prosecutions under the first six sections should be maintained for past offenses unless the contract or combination be in 'unreasonable' restraint of trade or commerce." The Senate Committee on the Judiciary, reporting against this proposed amendment, as well as others equally untenable, said:

To amend the antitrust act as suggested by this bill would be to entirely emasculate it and for all practical purposes render it nugatory as a remedial statute. Criminal prosecutions would not lie, and civil remedies would labor under the greatest doubt and uncertainty. * * * To destroy or undermine it at the present juncture, when combinations are on the increase and appear to be as oblivious as ever to the rights of the public, would be a calamity.

Thus appealing to the courts and Congress to amend the act by writing the word "unreasonable" therein, dismal defeat in every effort met the emissaries of the trusts and monopolies.

From the first decision on this statute to the oil and tobacco cases, the courts have strongly held that the mere tendency to stifle competition brought the acts within the prohibition of the law, regardless of the fact whether such acts were reasonable or unreasonable. All reasonable citizens agree that ordinary purchases and sales, formation of partnerships and honest corporate organizations do not violate the Sherman Act, although by incidental effect that may restrain as between parties interstate or foreign commerce. Monopoly is not constituted by size alone. The act is not violated where persons or corporations attain dominancy in business by normal and honest methods of enterprise. Such acts and agreements lack the elements of conspiracies constituting monopoly, combination, and intent to destroy competition and restrain trade.

WHAT "AGREEMENT" MEANS.

The Senate committee meant and the oil and tobacco cases mean, to state it in honest fashion, that the injection into the acts of whether an agreement or combination is reasonable or unreasonable renders it, as a criminal or penal statute, indefinite and uncertain, and hence nugatory and void and would be tantamount to repealing that part of the act. For there is no older and better settled principle of the law than the rule that there can be no crime unless the act is one which the party must know in advance is criminal. It must be definite and certain. Since the Supreme Court has amended the act by writing the word "unreasonable" therein, it may be well feared that the criminal parts can not be enforced.

The defense of reasonable restraint will be made everywhere and there are certain to be as many rules of what is reasonable as there are judicial forums in the country. The cases against the Standard Oil Trust and the Tobacco Trust had reached the Supreme Court in 1910. The trusts and monopolies rallied for one more effort in that forum and trained their guns against the provisions of the Sherman law. They made demand that the national will and legislative policy be thwarted by judicial amendment and that by a "modern rule of reason" only unreasonable trusts and monopolies be prohibited by law. Their advocates divided trusts and monopolies into "good" and "bad" and said the good ones are reasonable and only the bad ones can be unreasonable. Another battle was fought in the field of jurisprudence, and, with a changed personnel, the Supreme Court yielded to monopoly where thrice before they had refused to surrender. And in the year 1911, with a largely changed Supreme Court, the host of trusts and monopoly won a triumphant victory.

Before proceeding to state my views and analysis of the oil and tobacco cases, permit me to add that no man has a higher regard for the judiciary than that entertained by me. No patriotic citizen can afford to arouse prejudice against the courts. In the last analysis they are the palladium of our rights and liberties. Nor, on the other hand, should any reasonable man make a fetish of the judicial office. Judges are not above public opinion and criticism. Hence, fundamentally, I make no difference between the judicial and other offices, for they are all but creatures of the people's will and clothed with powers to be executed as trustees in behalf of the public under the Constitution and laws.

In the year 1911, after 15 years of weary waiting, Chief Justice White had his way and by a bare majority of one planted the decision of the court where he had stood in his dissenting opinion in 1896. In plain language he inserted the word "unreasonable" before the word "restraint," as he strongly contended was appropriate that year. In this judicial struggle it suits me to stand where the court stood in 1896, and where Justice Harlan took his stand in 1911. After exhaustive and patient study, my mind leads me to the inevitable conclusion that I must concur in the position assumed by that lamented justice, who in intellect ranks with America's greatest jurists.

WHAT JUSTICE HARLAN SAID.

In order that I may not transcend the proprieties of the occasion, permit me to reiterate what the public heard this eminent justice say in the debate occurring in the Supreme Court the day the opinions were handed down. He said:

With all due respect for the opinions of others, I feel bound to say that what the court has said may well cause some alarm for the integrity of our institutions.

Further along he said of the trusts and monopolies:

They at once set up the baseless claim that the decision of 1896 disturbed the "business interests of the country" and let it be known that they would never be content until the rule was established that would permit interstate commerce to be subjected to reasonable restraints.

With irrefragable logic he said:

The only answer which in frankness can be given to this question is that the court intends to decide that its deliberate judgment 15 years ago to the effect that the act permitted no restraint whatever of interstate commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable, was not in accordance with the "rule of reason." * * * I have the authority of this court for saying that such a course of proceedings on its part would be "judicial legislation."

Then he adds:

I said at the outset that the action of the court in this case might well alarm thoughtful men who revered the Constitution. I meant by this that many things are intimated and said in the court's opinion which will not be regarded as otherwise than sanctioning an invasion by the judiciary of the constitutional domain of Congress—an attempt by interpretation to soften or modify what some regard as a harsh public policy. This court, let me repeat, solemnly adjudged many years ago that it could not, except by judicial legislation, read words into the antitrust act not put there by Congress.

Then, in patriotic warning, he threw out this statement, which is confirmed by my career as a representative of the people at Washington:

After many years of public service at the National Capital, and after a somewhat close observation of the conduct of public affairs, I am impelled to say that there is abroad in our land a most harmful tendency to bring about the amending of constitutions and legislative enactments by means alone of judicial construction.

WHAT ROOSEVELT SAID.

The opinion of the court in the Tobacco case reaffirmed the victory achieved in the Oil case. It added nothing new in the application of the law. Indicating the view taken by the country of these opinions, allow me to quote a flamboyant announcement from a distinguished ex-President. In the Outlook he said:

It is contended that in these recent decisions the Supreme Court legislated. So it did, and it had to, because Congress had signally failed to do its duty by legislating. * * * Where the legislative body persistently leaves open a field which it is absolutely imperative, from the public standpoint, to fill, then no possible blame attached to the official or officials who step in, because they have to, and who then do the needed work in the interest of the people. The blame in such cases lies with the body which has been derelict and not with the body which reluctantly makes good the dereliction.

Hamilton in his wildest dreams of absolutism never advanced the doctrine that the Supreme Court should legislate. Aye, more! This distinguished ex-President urges that not only shall the Supreme Court legislate where Congress fails to act or acts as he would not approve, but that executive officers and other officials shall make good the needed legislation by their action and usurpation. Away with such doctrine! Again I say, let us hug to our bosoms the Constitution of our fathers. Let the three departments occupy their spheres. Executive officers have no rights except those of executive character. Legislative officers have no prerogatives of power except those pertaining to legislation. Judicial officers have no rightful domain for exercise of their powers except in the judicial field. When they transcend that they should be scourged back by public opinion and criticism to their constitutional limitations, and the people invariably, with righteous indignation, should hold all officers within their corporate spheres. Any other view will wreck this Government, and we owe it to ourselves here and elsewhere to assert our conception of duty in courageous and candid action. This same gentleman in his article divides trust and monopolies into good and bad, scouts the idea of a return to wholesome laws of conpetition, and proposes in lieu thereof the combination of good trusts and monopolies and the supervision of all by a small governmental commission to regulate them and give the good ones certain freedom and license. These doctrines are vicious and against the genius of our institutions and civilization. Our duty is in the other direction.

We must, to preserve our liberties, return to the ancient doctrine of competition and decree that combinations must be destroyed and private monopoly perish from the earth. Never should we assert that these vast monopolies and trusts may seek refuge under the wings of a small governmental commission of men with thousands of cases piled before them in every conceivable form of litigation, where private litigants are too poor to assert their rights.

If it be said that the courts should be above just criticism and that we should not raise our voices as sovereigns against them, let me remind you that they have not always been regarded as inviolate by the American people.

THE DRED SCOTT CASE.

More than 50 years ago Chief Justice Taney rendered a decision that provoked criticism and drew that great tribunal into the maelstrom of violent public discussion. To illustrate the feeling then engendered, let me remind you of some things said and done at that time. Mr. Blaine says:

The aversion with which the extreme antislavery men regarded Chief Justice Taney was strikingly exhibited during the session of Congress following his death. The customary mark of respect in providing a marble bust of the deceased to be placed in the Supreme Court room was ordered by the House without comment or objection. In the Senate * * * the proposition to pay respect to the memory of the judge who had pronounced the Dred Scott decision was at once savagely attacked by Mr. Sumner. Mr. Sumner said: "Taney would be hooted down the passages of history and that an emancipated country would fix upon his name the stigma that it deserved. He had administered justice wickedly, had degraded the judiciary, and degraded the age."

Mr. Sumner's protest was vigorously seconded by Mr. Hale, of New Hampshire, and Mr. Wade, of Ohio. The former said that a monument to Taney "would give the lie to all that had been said by the friends of justice, liberty, and downtrodden humanity" respecting the iniquity of the Dred Scott decision. Mr. Wade avowed his belief that the "Dred Scott case was got up to give judicial sanction to the enormous iniquity that prevailed in every branch of our Government at that period."

He insisted that the people of Ohio, whose opinions he professed to represent, "would pay $2,000 to hang the late Chief Justice in effigy rather than $1,000 for a bust to commemorate his merits."

Mr. Sumner concluded the debate and said that in listening to the Senator from Maryland he was "reminded of a character known to the Roman Church who always figured at the canonization of a saint as the devil's advocate." He added that if he could help it "Taney should never be recognized as a saint by any vote of Congress." A vote was therefore abandoned on the 23d of February, 1865.

Nine years after these proceedings, in January, 1874, the name of another Chief Justice, who had died during the recess, came before Congress for honor and commemoration. All the Senators who had spoken in the previous debate were gone, except Mr. Sumner, who had meanwhile been chosen for his fourth term, and Mr. Wilson, who had been elevated to the Vice Presidency. The bill was passed without debate and with the unanimous consent of the Senate.

All these harsh things were said, although the decision was absolutely correct and has never been overruled.

RECALL OF JUDGES.

With proper regard and respect for the judiciary, I must assert that those officials are more responsible for the specter of the recall of judges stalking through the country than any other influence in the Republic. There would be lack of candor in my remarks if I failed to declare that in my humble judgment the action of the Supreme Court in nullifying long and well-established adjudications in the income-tax decision and the antitrust cases is almost entirely responsible for stirring up the living issue of recall. If the court had not uprooted their former decision and thereby defied the national will as expressed in congressional enactment and changed by judicial construction and amendment plain words and acts, recall sentiment would not be so rife this day. It is not fair to charge that what some choose to call the rabble, the masses, have altogether aroused this sentiment. I repel the impeachment and defend the right of the people to discuss and seek solution of these problems. Without here discussing the necessity and desirability of recalling judges, long since I have concluded that there should be a speedier and more effective remedy than the cumbersome process of impeachment where impeachment will not lie.

REMOVAL BY ADDRESS.

There should be the cumulative remedy of "removal by address" for nonimpeachable cases by a majority vote of the House and Senate, as is done in England and many States of the Union. This would go far toward putting the Government more directly in the hands of the people and vesting sovereign final action where it appropriately belongs. This method of dealing with judges unfit for office has evolved an almost perfect judiciary system in England, where the judges rank with the world's greatest, and has worked with magic effect in States where it has been adopted and whose judges are unrivaled by the other Commonwealths. It is therefore commended as a supplementary remedy for the ponderous method of impeachment.

REMEDY FOR THE DEFECTS.

Having thus briefly outlined the history of our Federal antitrust statute and judicial construction touching the same, permit me to point out some apparent defects challenging attention and remedy.

First, it is essential to safeguarding the people's rights that the Sherman law should be amended or supplemented so that the "rule of reason" written therein by the Supreme Court shall be entirely eliminated and place the meaning of the statute where the framers intended it should be. The language should be written in such plain and unequivocal fashion that courts will never hereafter construe the word "unreasonable" into the wording thereof, either before the word "restraint" or anywhere else in the act, so that he who runs may read therein that all restraints of trade and commerce by trusts and monopolies, whether reasonable or unreasonable, shall be forever prohibited.

Congress should proceed to speedily repeal the judicial amendment which has maimed this important law. The act should be retained with all its present efficiency without the slightest impairment. Contracts and combinations now prohibited by it should so continue under its prohibitions, but there should be further accurate definitions so as to define with the utmost precision acts constituting a trust, monopoly, and combination. There should be no doubt and uncertainty left either in the minds of the courts or the offenders, and those engaged in business should be apprised of the exact limits of their activities under the law.

PROVIDE ADEQUATE PENALTIES.

And then adequate penalties should be provided and the stigma of a felony placed upon violators, as first proposed by Sherman, Reagan, George, Walthall, Vest, and others. The penitentiary should be designated as the place of abode for a term of years, ranging from 2 to 10 years, for those criminals who will not respect the majesty of this statute. We might not convict all offenders, but we would succeed in numerous cases and deter many from violating the law.

When the first act was passed there were not many trusts in existence. Amongst the larger ones were the Beef Trust, the Oil Trust, and the Coal Trust. Since that day they have grown until their capital stock amounts to billions and billions of dollars. With the Dingley and the Payne-Aldrich high tariff acts constituting a wall of protection around the Republic, our country has become a veritable breeding ground, seething and reeking with monopoly and combinations in restraint of legitimate trade and commerce. Two or three bankers in New York City have accumulated vast amounts of wealth and have taken under their wings the great railroad and industrial corporations of the country and are manipulating their finances. They run the daily balance in those banks to hundreds of millions of dollars. Four or five years ago these corporations and trusts deposited their funds in the localities where domiciled. But now they are compelled to pile up their deposits in these banks, under whose complete dominion they are now conducting their affairs. So manifest is this concentration and abuse that more than two years ago, before the startling developments were made before the Pujo Money Trust Committee, an eminent American statesman, Woodrow Wilson, said:

> The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the Nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men, who, even if their action be honest and intended for the public interest, are necessarily concentrated upon the great undertaking in which their money is involved, and who necessarily, by very reason of their limitations, chill and check and destroy genuine economic freedom. This is the greatest question of all, and to this statesmen must adjust themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men.

These were brave words, and we should proceed to take them as their meaning implies.

TESTIMONY OF MORGAN.

J. Pierpont Morgan and his partner, George F. Baker, admitted before a committee in Washington that they dominated and controlled practically all of the great interstate railways and industrial corporations and trusts through interlocking directorates, voting trusts, and various financial conspiracies. They have solemnly sworn before the congressional committee at Washington that in the aggregate they hold 385 directorates in 41 banks and trust companies, having total resources of $3,832,000,000 and total deposits of $2,834,000,000; 50 directorships in 11 insurance companies, having total assets of $2,646,000,000; 155 directorships in 31 railroad systems, having a total capitalization of $12,193,000,000 and a total mileage of 163,200; 6 directorships in 2 express companies and 4 directorships in 1 steamship company, with a combined capital of $245,000,000 and gross income of $97,000,000; 98 directorships in 28 producing and trading corporations, having a total capitalization of $3,583,000,000 and total gross annual earnings in excess of $1,145,000,000; and 48 directorships in 19 public utility corporations having a total capitalization of $2,826,000,000 and total gross annual earnings in excess of $428,000,000; in all, 746 directorships in 134 corporations, having total resources or capitalization of $25,325,000,000. To put it in perhaps more graphic form, it has been established before the Pujo committee and Morgan, Baker, and their allies forced to there admit, that a phase of their conspiracy and Money Trust may be fairly put as follows:

THE GREAT SEVEN.

The following seven institutions have total resources of $1,398,000,000: J. P. Morgan & Co. (and Drexel & Co.), deposits, $163,000,000; Guaranty Trust Co., $292,000,000; Bankers' Trust Co., $205,000,000; First National Bank, $149,000,000; National City Bank, $247,000,000; Chase National Bank, $125,000,000; National Bank of Commerce, $190,000,000; that the Mutual and Equitable Life have combined resources of $1,091,000,000, making a total in these nine institutions of $2,489,000,000. The business of making large issues of securities of the great interstate corporations has during the past five years been conducted mainly on joint account between J. P. Morgan & Co., the First National Bank, and the National City Bank of New York; Lee Higginson & Co. and Kidder, Peabody & Co., of Boston; and the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank and the First National Bank of Chicago. This only partially illustrates their tremendous concentration of money and credit. Aye, more, not only do these gentlemen and their allies dominate business and finance, but they have grasped the reins of government and have given us a government by and for the trusts. Candor compels me to say that you may compare with fairness these identical men who control the Money Trust and they square completely and exactly with the names of those who financed the presidential campaign of 1904 for The Outlook editor, who now believes in emasculating the Sherman law by judicial amendment. The names of Morgan, Rockefeller, Stotesbury, Rogers, Archbold, Perkins, and others are found in the Money Trust group and the Political Trust group and fit into one another as the hand in the glove. Proof before the Pujo committee and the Clapp election committee reveal these two groups as being similar and joined together as the Siamese twins; and yet they are one and the same coterie. These things were first denied, but established by proof before these committees; all confess them.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES.

George F. Baker, one of Morgan's partners and allies in the Money Trust, said at Washington that the banking credit of the country, amounting to $23,000,000,000, is virtually under complete sway of a small group of men in New York; that the leading banks, because of interlocking directorates, act in harmony in the control of large transactions; that the Nation's transportation interests in the same manner are under concentrated control and that the vast industrial enterprises are likewise dominated by this all-powerful association. He proudly boasted and explained the various devices employed to evade the law, or, as he phrased it, to "conform with the law." He admitted that in 50 years his single bank had collected $86,000,000 of profits upon a $500,000 capital; that banks were consolidated despite the law, through the creation of holding companies; that there is a certain "concentration of power, in which Mr. Morgan is the overshadowing figure," and that the safety of the national interests lies solely in the personnel, the good intentions of these men. At last, it is flaunted in the faces of the American people that these men have the safety of the Republic in their grasp and that we must trust to their goodness for our happiness and prosperity.

SOME OF THE PROBLEMS.

These things foreshadow some of the problems in Federal legislation and we must meet them as men and patriots. Jackson won his fight and the Nation still lives. Wilson will win his and our institutions will survive and bless the generations yet to come. Turn where you will and there is a saturnalia of trust organization and monopolistic conspiracy. As Sir John Culpeper said in the Long Parliament, we may say of the trusts and monopolies now:

> They are a nest of wasps—a swarm of vermin which have overcrept the land. Like the frogs of Egypt, they have gotten possession of our dwellings and we have scarce a room free from them; they sup in our cups; they dip in our dish; they sit by our fire. We find them in the dye vat, washbowl, and powdering tub. They share with the butler in his box. They will not bate us a pin. We may not buy our clothes without their brokerage. These are the leeches that have sucked the Commonwealth so hard that it is almost hectical.

These conditions point to the plain duty of Congress in some respects. We can drive out of interstate and foreign commerce every corporation with fictitious and watered stock, those whose capital stock is so great as to make them approximate monopoly, all holding companies and all corporations whose stocks are owned and controlled by holding companies and other corporations. We can place a limitation on the capital stock of these corporations and banks; we can prohibit the holding and voting of the stock of these banks by other corporations; we can prevent interlocking directorates. We can prohibit their consolidating in the roundabout way now in vogue which piles up money in their vaults amounting to many millions of dollars to the detriment of the entire country. We have power under the Constitution to prevent this interlocking of directorates and coalescing of stocks and interests, and should hasten to apply it by congressional action. We know the facts, and a comprehensive law will bring the relief so manifestly just to the people. We can and should destroy protectionism and bring this country to a tariff strictly and only for revenue.

All these things will be consuming and burning political issues during the next few years and will not down till the appropriate legislative remedies have been devised and applied and the Government restored to the hands of the people, where their just rights will be safeguarded under a wise and courageous administration.

By a strange coincidence of history there have come out of the bosom of New Jersey the great trusts, the holding companies, and the gigantic monopolies. From this proud Commonwealth have come the dragon's teeth, and now it seems as if in the very providence and wisdom of God there has come from her borders the giant this year sent forth to exterminate the dragons infesting the land. When history is finally recorded, Jackson and New Jersey's governor will stand forth as the two great figures triumphing in memorable struggles as the champions of popular rights. We must have no class legislation and arraying of class against class. We must have no clamor against legitimate wealth honestly acquired. There must be no unjust attack against corporations and corporate powers within the limits of their granted charter rights. There should be no hysteria in our procedure. And still trusts and monopolies must be disintegrated and utterly eradicated. The conflict is and should be irrepressible.

As a legislator and an American I dedicate my energies to the people in this struggle, and with the Constitution as my guide and the sanctity of the law as my inspiration, I have enlisted in the contest until absolute equality for every citizen is again our watchword from ocean to ocean.

For a Square Deal in the Postal Service.

OF

HON. WARREN WORTH BAILEY,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, October 21, 1913.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish in a few words to direct attention to what seems to me a most unwarranted and an extremely flagrant and inexcusable discrimination in our postal service—a discrimination so rank and so utterly indefensible that it is a marvel it has gone so long practically unchallenged.

I refer to the denial of that free delivery and collection of mail to the towns and villages of the country which have long been enjoyed by the cities and which in recent years have been extended to the rural districts. The injustice to the towns and villages is obvious. It puts them at a distinct disadvantage. It subjects them to a handicap which would not be tolerated for an instant were it to come in the form of a different and a higher rate for postage. Yet a different and a higher rate of postage would not be a worse hardship than that imposed by a discrimination in service such as that which actually has been accepted with scarcely a murmur for so many years.

City delivery service is now in operation in 1,709 towns and cities, serving approximately a population of 47,000,000, at a cost of $38,000,000. Experimental delivery is in operation in 114 communities, at a cost of $90,000. Officials of the Post Office Department estimate that there are 6,604 communities, with an average population of 2,000, where there is no carrier delivery service. Estimating that it would require an average of two carriers, at $600 each per annum, to serve each of these communities, should delivery service be established, the cost would be $7,924,800 per annum.

Mr. Speaker, can there be any sound reason why the 12,000,000 residents of towns and villages should be denied what is freely and most properly given the residents of city and rural districts? To me the situation seems anomalous. It is glaringly inequitable. In proportion to number the towns and villages are bearing an equal burden with cities and rural districts in supporting this Government. They are therefore equally entitled to all its benefits and advantages.

Can there be any gentleman on this floor or elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, who would seriously propose that letters mailed in a town or village should bear a 3-cent stamp while those mailed in the city or on a rural route were required to bear only a 2-cent stamp? Such a proposition would be rejected instantly. Yet little protest has thus far been heard against a discrimination which in effect is just as little capable of defense. If the patron of the post office who lives on Broadway or out in the country is entitled to have his mail collected and delivered at his door, is not the patron who lives in a town or village equally entitled to similar service?

Mr. Speaker, he is not getting it. Two or three or more times every day he must drop his work to go to the post office to receive or to deposit his mail. This means loss of time; it means inconvenience; it means just as much to him relatively as it would mean to the banker or the farmer if he were obliged to quit his counting house or his plow for a trip to the post office. The notion that time in a town or village is a negligible quantity is as idle as the notion that we may tax ourselves rich or that to ship more goods out of the country than we bring in is to create a "favorable" balance. Time is money in the town or village as much as in the city or the rural district, and the resident of town or village is entitled in all conscience to every consideration and advantage which we accord to the broker of the city or the farmer out in the remote rural district.

It was with these thoughts in mind, Mr. Speaker, that a few days ago I brought in a bill (H. R. 8947) under the provisions of which free delivery is to be extended to all towns and villages in the United States which are not entitled under existing laws to such delivery. I am extremely glad to say that this proposal met with an instant response from communities which it is designed to relieve. Newspaper comment upon this measure has been wide and mainly favorable. The tone of the country press is especially enthusiastic. Everywhere the proposal has been hailed as a sound one, supported by every consideration of reason and justice. I shall ask leave, Mr. Speaker, to append to my remarks some of these newspaper comments, believing that the Members of this House will be interested in them, as I have been, and that they will lend strength to my appeal for what I deem to be simple justice to many millions of our best and most useful citizens, for everywhere the quality of the citizenship of town and village is recognized. It is largely from the town and village that the best element of the great centers of business are recruited.

The town and the village are the nurseries and the schools where strong, capable, ambitious, and resourceful men and women are fitted for the great things which need to be done. It seems to me a safe assertion that five out of six of the membership of this body were village bred. The foundations of the careers they have made for themselves were laid in these small communities, where the touch of elbow was close, where human sympathy was spontaneous, where life had room to expand, and where the social amenities were unrestrained by dubious convention.

It was my good fortune to grow up in a village myself, and I can therefore speak with some knowledge of village life and of village needs. There may be a sneer here and there from the city dweller, who fancies that the villager has nothing to do, and that going to the post office two or three times a day is a mere diversion, a break in the dreadful monotony. But life in the town or village is just as earnest a proposition as life in the city or in the country. It has its cares, its interests, its compulsions, its necessities, its exacting duties, not less than life elsewhere. Thank God it is not so sordid, not so hopeless, not so steeped in monotony as we see it in some of the crowded centers; it is not so frivolous and idle and meretricious as we see it as it flaunts its fine feathers at the resorts of fashion; but it is sincere, full of zest, alive to its responsibilities, stimulated always by neighborly kindness and by that relative freedom of movement which the overcrowded city makes impossible.

The bill as introduced by me is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8947) to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the free-delivery mail service to towns and villages of 1,000 population or over.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend free-delivery mail service to all towns and villages in the United States having a population of 1,000 or over that are not by existing law entitled to such delivery, and for this purpose the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available immediately on the passage of this act and to be expended for the purpose named by the Postmaster General under such regulations as he may prescribe.

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

I would hardly be fair to myself did I not admit that I am actuated by a double motive in demanding an equalization of the postal service in behalf of a class now denied almost the best half of that service. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we open the way for spending the revenues of the Government for useful purposes we shall automatically close the way for spending them for purposes far from useful, say for battle ships and big guns, for fortifications and military expansion. The waste of money in this direction has been wanton. Had it been thrown into the sea less harm would have been done; there would have been the loss only of the money itself or of the labor it represented. But when it is devoted to the building of dreadnoughts and to the maintenance of a great standing army in a time of profound peace, we add to the unnecessary burdens thus imposed the waste of human effort involved in the drawing of thousands of young men from gainful pursuits into a service which brings no gain either moral or material and makes them pensioners upon the labor and industry of the workers.

I do not care to dwell particularly upon this phase of the matter, but it is one which deserves consideration. We have been running mad over militarism in its various aspects, and even a Democratic Congress is proposing to spend or will be asked to spend more than $300,000,000 on the Army and Navy during the fiscal year to come. Against this I protest. In our platform we are pledged "to that simplicity and economy which befit a democratic government." Our solemn word is plighted to the American people that we will lighten the burden of taxation and sharply depart from the program of extravagance to which the Republican Party had been committed for years. Shall we disregard the duty which our stewardship imposes? Shall we outdo even the Republican Party in lavish expenditure? Or shall we lop off the useless and the profligate and turn our attention to matters which will yield a return on the investment?

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to spend money freely where it can be spent with a reasonable assurance of bringing a return. There is therefore no hesitation on my part in proposing to spend a few millions for a needed improvement in the postal service. This service has always brought substantial betterments. It has always yielded abundantly in public benefits on the investment. No function of the Government comes closer to the people than that of the post office. Its services are of inestimable value. We can scarcely conceive of the condition which would prevail were this service cut off wholly from all as it is now cut off in part from the towns and villages of the land. Our business and social life is so intimately knit up with this service that to destroy it would be almost to destroy that life itself. And I want this intimate relation to be more intimate still.

I want it extended to include the now neglected element. I want it to reach out to the communities now relatively isolated. I want it to mean as much to town and village as it to-day means to city and rural district. And so I appeal here on this floor and to the people of the country for what I conceive to be bare justice in the interest of good business. I appeal for this in behalf of 12,000,000 American citizens whose rights are equal with the rights of all the rest, yet who are getting less than an equal treatment. They seem hitherto to have been voiceless. No one has stood here to speak for them. But in my humble way let me plead their cause. They are the victims of a sheer injustice. A disproportionate burden rests upon them. Advantages as much their right as they are the right of the other millions who enjoy them are withheld from them in the name of economy. But there is no economy in injustice. It always imposes penalties. And the penalty of this injustice is being paid every day by the people of the United States in a postal service that falls short of that highest efficiency which would be attained by carrying the mails to all as the mails are now carried to some.

PRESS COMMENT.

A SQUARE DEAL.

[From the Johnstown (Pa.) Leader.]

Congressman BAILEY'S bill for the extension of free mail delivery to towns of 1,000 population or more has met with very general commendation. It is, of course, approved by the people of such towns, but it is also regarded as only a square deal by the people of the larger towns and cities and of the rural districts where there is free delivery. What Mr. BAILEY proposes is certain to come sooner or later. He may be a little in advance of the times, but he has at least attracted country-wide attention and has caused agitation of the subject.

AN ENTIRELY REASONABLE MEASURE.

[From the Doylestown (Pa.) Democrat.]

Representative WARREN WORTH BAILEY, of the Cambria-Blair-Bedford district of this State, has introduced a bill in the House providing for the extension of the Free Delivery Mail Service to all towns in the United States with a population exceeding 1,000 which are not entitled under existing laws to such delivery. The bill carries an appropriation of $10,000,000, to be immediately available upon the passage of the bill.

This bill seems to have considerable merit, and it ought to receive favorable consideration by Congress. There are now, according to estimate of the Post Office Department, 6,604 communities, with an average population of 2,000, which at present do not have free carrier service, while the larger towns and the rural communities do have it. It seems like an unwarranted discrimination to deprive these 6,604 communities of advantages enjoyed by the rest of the country, especially when the service can be obtained at an estimated cost of $7,924,800. This cost, it is believed, would be eventually compensated by increased revenue derived from the increased mail facilities.

Mr. BAILEY in advocating his bill says that there is no function of the Government more important to the welfare of the people than that of the post office, facilitating, as it does, communication and making for freedom of exchange. He says he presented the bill with due regard for the pledge of economy contained in the platform adopted by the Democrats at Baltimore, and believes that the extension of the free delivery service he advocates will so stimulate the use of the mails that the actual cost of the extension to the Government will be insignificant. We should like to see Mr. BAILEY'S bill cordially supported as an entirely reasonable postal measure.

A SQUARE DEAL FOR ALL.

[From the Freeland (Pa.) Press.]

People who reside in small towns now have an opportunity to be classed with their city brethren in the way of up-to-date postal service.

Representative WARREN WORTH BAILEY, of Johnstown, has introduced a bill providing for the extension of the Free Delivery Mail Service to all towns in the United States with a population exceeding 1,000 which are not entitled under existing law to such delivery. The bill carries with it an appropriation of $10,000,000, to become immediately available on the passage of the act. Mr. BAILEY takes the ground that the present postal service is anomalous, in that, while residents of the cities and of rural districts are given free-delivery service, residents of over 6,000 communities with an average population of 2,000 are compelled to visit the post office to deposit or receive mail. He believes that this is an injustice to residents of towns and villages and he proposes by his bill to cure this.

It behooves the people who reside in the towns classified under Congressman BAILEY'S bill to get busy at once. You can assist this cause wonderfully by simply asking the Congressman from your district to support Mr. BAILEY'S measure. Get your board of trade or business men's league to forward petitions praying for its passage. The bill seems to be carefully drawn, and if it becomes a law will repeal our antiquated statutes and provide in their stead a modern code suitable to present conditions and future developments in postal matters. It must be remembered that certain large centers of trade are clamoring for penny postage, while others want free delivery established in all small towns first. Where do you stand—for free delivery, certainly—then get busy.

Congressman CASEY will be in Freeland to-morrow, as one of the Mitchell day speakers—ask him to support the bill. He always stands for a "square deal," and that is what this Bailey bill is—a square deal for all.

Freeland is at present operating under the experimental village delivery service. It is one of 144 communities thus favored and is exactly what Mr. BAILEY, through his bill, proposes to make general and establish permanently throughout the entire United States. There was no provision made for equipping the experimental village delivery service which we have in Freeland. This is why we have no street letter boxes. Congressman BAILEY'S bill provides $10,000,000 for equipping the service, hence you can perform a dual duty to-morrow. See CASEY.

AFTER A GOOD THING.

[From the Gallitzin (Pa.) Item.]

Representative W. W. BAILEY has surely started a move for a good thing when he presented the bill for free delivery for towns of 1,000 population, and he should be commended for it and given the assistance of the citizens of such towns.

Each town would have to have the street names posted and the houses numbered, but this expense would not amount to much.

If the expenses of the department must be cut down to make the free delivery possible, let them cut out the printing of envelopes free and the carrying of them through the mails free. Let them cut out the carrying free of so much printed matter that is distributed by Senators and Congressmen which usually goes to the wastebasket unread.

At any rate, Mr. BAILEY is after a good thing and we hope he will land it.

SHOULD GET GENERAL SUPPORT.

[From the Pen Argyl (Pa.) Index.]

Representative WARREN WORTH BAILEY, of Johnstown, Pa., last week introduced a bill in the House at Washington providing for the extension of the delivery mail service to all towns in the United States with a population exceeding 1,000, which are not entitled under existing laws to such delivery. The bill carries with it an appropriation of $10,000,000, to become immediately available on the passage of the act.

Mr. BAILEY rightly takes the ground that the present postal service is anomalous, in that while residents of the cities and of the rural districts are given free delivery service residents of something over 6,000 communities with an average population of 2,000 are compelled to visit the post offices to deposit or to receive mail. He believes that this is an injustice to the residents of towns and villages, and he proposes by his bill to cure this.

Under the present laws a town must have a population of 5,000 or postal receipts of $10,000 to have free delivery service. Pen Argyl has neither and hence does not enjoy this service, while Nazareth, with about the same population, but having the required postal receipts, has free delivery service. Residents of Plainfield and Washington Townships, just outside the borough limits, have the mail brought to their doors daily, while residents within the borough limits, hardly a stone's throw distant, do not have this facility, but must walk a mile to the post office for their mail.

Representative BAILEY'S bill should receive the support of the citizens of every town and village in the country thus discriminated against under existing laws, and all Senators and Representatives should be importuned by their constituents from such districts to favor the measure.

OF

HON. THETUS W. SIMS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 5, 1913.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address by Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas, at the opening of the San Diego Exposition, which was delivered on September 26, 1913.

Representative HENRY spoke as follows:

BALBOA.

"He was tall, handsomely formed, of a very stout and vigorous appearance, with red hair and a countenance which interested and attracted people toward him."

In this verbal photograph an accomplished historian has preserved to the world the image of Vasco Nunez de Balboa.

It is not my purpose to undertake to-day the contribution of historic information, but rather to join in celebrating the achievement of one whose name is fixed in the permanent annals of the world's progress.

It is not inappropriate to here review briefly the life of one whose deeds of valor and world-renowned discoveries are familiar to mankind. On this eventful day, commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of Balboa's great discovery, it should thrill the hearts of all to draw near the personality of this great wizard of adventure and achievement while we look face to face upon the make-up and career of this marvelous man. Exactly 400 years have passed, and yet his life and deeds fire the heart with a fervor no less thrilling than that pulsating the bosoms of those standing by his side when, with majestic gaze, he first beheld the Pacific Ocean and gave mankind the proudest and richest domain the sun in his "all-seeing circuit" ever shone upon.

He was born in 1475 in the Spanish Province of Estremadura. His family was poor, but he descended from noble ancestry and was a gentleman. In 1500, in search of gold and glory, he embarked with Bastides for the New World. After touching the west side of the Gulf of Venezuela they proceeded to Nombre de Dios, situated on the Isthmus of Darien about 24 miles east of where old Porto Bello was situated. Shortly after, with much treasure and a fragment of Bastides's men, he reached Hispaniola, now Haiti. He did not return to Spain with Bastides, but undertook to manage a farm near the town of Salvatierra on the seacoast. He did not succeed in farming and became involved in debt. The sea and adventure again beckoned to his ambition, and he embarked as a soldier of fortune.

He placed himself in a cask of "victuals" carried from the farm on board a ship sailing for South America. When out at sea Balboa appeared from his hiding place and persuaded the surprised and angry captain to allow him to proceed on the voyage. He guided Enciso to a pleasant place on the Gulf of Uraba, where Balboa had visited on this first voyage with Bastides, and there his real career began.

He informed Enciso that this country, called Darien, was full of fruits and that gold abounded in the region. Here at the age of 35 he was appointed alcalde, and here it was he planned for his adventures, discoveries, and immortal glories.

Time forbids following in detail the career of this wonderful explorer and renowned discoverer, but it is not amiss to review somewhat briefly the notable features of his historic achievements, perhaps the most far-reaching in the world's richest progress and development.

Having settled his company at Darien, he immediately began to conquer the surrounding country. In one excursion he first, from Chief Comogre, heard of the great western ocean across the mountains and the gold in Peru. After returning from a voyage he learned that Enciso had endeavored to prejudice his King against him, and in anxiety he determined to attempt some great enterprise the success of which would conciliate his sovereign.

On September 1, 1513, with 190 Spaniards and 1,000 natives, he set out in quest of the western sea. On September 26, from the top of a mountain range, he sighted the Pacific Ocean. He sent Pizarro and others in several parties to reconnoiter. Alonzo Martin, one of his scouts, was the first European to actually touch the new-found sea. On September 29 Balboa himself arrived and in the name of his monarch took possession of the newly discovered "Southern Waters." Here he remained for a while, visited the Pearl Islands, and with much booty triumphantly returned on January 18, 1514.

He at once sent messengers and valuable presents to his King and announced his discovery. And in acknowledgment of his achievement his monarch created him adelantado of the South Sea—admiral of the Pacific—and governor of Panama and Coyba.

Meanwhile Pedrarias Davilla, by order of the King, sailed with an expedition to take charge of the Darien colony, and thus supplant Balboa. Prior to Pedrarias reaching the scenes of discovery, Balboa had frequently crossed the Isthmus and visited the Pacific, and was planning the conquest of Peru and wider explorations of the new ocean. He had built, armed, and launched his brigantines. With them he took possession of Pearl Islands, and had not adverse weather conditions intervened would have conquered Peru.

Here his career ended by reason of the treachery of false friends and the jealousy of Pedrarias. False friends! Alas, too numerous! Balboa was enticed to Acla, near Darien, by a cunning message, where he was placed in irons, imprisoned, and by forced sentence on the part of Pedrarias, who compelled the judge, was condemned to death. On the public square of Acla, in 1517, his head went to the block. Thus ended the career of a great general and remarkable statesman.

His far-seeing and brilliant vision have reached consummation in the progress and development now being enacted on the greatest theater the world ever saw. Looking back upon his eventful career, history clearly reveals that upon the expulsion of Enciso, Balboa was inspired to great endeavor by reason of the responsibility falling upon him. He fully justified his lofty ambition by noble service, he raised his mind to the high dignity of his office and elevated himself in public opinion almost to the height attained by Columbus.

In the permanent annals of achievement his name is perpetuated as one of the most high minded and generous of all the Spanish-American conquistadores. His command over men was the marvel of his day. And with his inspiration and guidance nothing seemed impossible to the Spaniards of his time. Columbus sought in vain for the passage to the other ocean beyond the continent; but it remained for the man this day honored by us to reveal the Pacific after the great navigator had gone on the final voyage of all mankind.

It fires the heart with consuming fervor to even now contemplate Balboa on the mountain heights that September morn. He had thought to start in the gray dawn of that eventful day, but his exhausted soldiers moved slowly and it was close to noon when, emerging from the forests, they beheld the great peak before them. Leaving his men grouped together at the dividing line between the rank growth and the scanty vegetation higher up, he went forward alone. Advancing over rocks washed by the centuries of storm, he finally reached the summit. Before his view the long-hoped-for scene spread out before him—"a wilderness of forest gemmed with sparkling streams and bounded by the watery horizon, the ocean along the sky line, vast, boundless, glittering like a diamond beneath the sun."

With thrilling heart he knelt and thanked God for the glorious privilege vouchsafed him as the first European to behold the southern sea. He shouted to his men to come and gaze upon the ocean so long desired and sought. Addressing his men, he concluded in language significant far beyond its import that day:

> We are the first to gaze upon it and shall be the first to reach its shores. To us belong their treasures and ours alone shall be the glory of reducing these numerous dominions to subjection in the name of our King and of causing to be shed upon them the light of the only true religion. Follow me, then, faithful as hitherto, and I promise you the world shall not behold your equals in wealth and glory."

Yes; in "wealth and glory." Prophetic words! Behold that "wealth and glory" reaching in vast expanse from Peru across Panama to Oregon's farther limits, from California through Texas, from the Mexic sea to the limits of Canada along the majestic sweep of the Mississippi's course—all spread out before us this day, upon which the world's great drama of progress and civilization is being played!

And there they erected from a great tree a cross where Balboa first saw the sea. And the company knelt reverently before the holy symbol as their chaplain offered thanks for the privilege accorded them. They signed a testimonial evidencing that they took possession of the sea and shores in the name of Spain. Their notary duly attested it, and then Balboa with his companions descended to the south.

In due time he and his men reached the shores of the Pacific and took possession of the waters in the name of their sovereign. Every student of history knows the story of the solemn ceremony that day performed in a secluded spot on the tortuous Bay of San Miguel, deeply indenting the southern coast of Darien.

In a short 10 years thereafter, had the spirit of Balboa been permitted to revisit the summit of that lofty mountain, which now in proud majesty towers over the bosom of Panamanian waters, unfolding before his vision there would have appeared an empire extending thousands of miles from Darien along the Pacific to Oregon's northernmost limits, to the eastward until it reached the Father of Waters, and along his course to the northward until it almost touched the limit over which now loom the lofty mountains of Canada's domain—a vast, kingly empire under one flag.

Historians have written that those early Spaniards came here for "gold and glory," but when we search their motives and contemplate their work, they sought more than sordid things. They came to dedicate and consecrate this vast empire to the God of Nations and the Redeemer of Men! And in generations to come, whatever may have been or is to be, it must be written in the annals of history that the Spanish people are joint heirs to our common glory and whatever destiny awaits our Republic.

Coming from Texas, I may be pardoned for the pride my native State feels in her history so intimately linked with that of California. When that captivating and dazzling conqueror, Cortez, had finally planted the standard of European civilization in the halls of Montezuma and added Mexico to the Kingdom of Spain, the same brown-robed priests came from Zacatecas to Texas and laid, broad and deep, the foundation of another civilization soon to follow. They erected the missions near Nacogdoches in eastern Texas and founded Concepcion and the Alamo. They built the great highway and left their impress to guide those who soon thereafter followed their footprints. These men deserve to be called the "uncrowned heroes" of those early days.

And now, as Californians and Texans, let us turn our vision to the Panama Canal and contemplate its significance to these two great States, one so intimately nestling against the Gulf of Mexico and the other against the Pacific Ocean. The mind of man can not conceive the importance of its opening to Texas and California, to the South and West. It will give tremendous impetus to the manufactures of cotton and iron and lumber. It will hurry us to an era of shipbuilding in America and vastly stimulate our naval pride and power. The great regions of the Southern States and the Mississippi Valley, with rich soil and virile people, with navigable waters and untold resources, will break the monopoly of railroad transportation and cover the earth and sea with their commerce.

The industries of the South will multiply beyond our most optimistic contemplation. The products of our cotton mills and iron furnaces, our timber, steel, and coal, will rush through the canal and supply South America, Japan, and China and reach every clime under the sun. California will be released from railroad monopoly, and by this new water route take her position in intimate relation with all European countries. Your orchards, your vineyards, your forests, and your manifold products will be instantly put in touch with all the world. Texas and California, the South and West, arm in arm will march across the continent from ocean to ocean, back and forth, and will proudly strut across the seas everywhere to capture trade and commerce heretofore beyond our reach, but now and forever our legitimate captives. This canal, for 400 years an idle dream, but a dream now come true, bids fair to entirely change the commercial map of the world and shift the seat of commerce, business, and empire from the North Atlantic to the southern and western ports. Standing here amid these glories and realities, how our hearts should beat and leap with joy as God to-day smiles on this consummation.

Senator Seward said:

> Who does not see that every year hereafter European commerce, European politics, European thought, and European activity, although actually becoming more intimate, will nevertheless ultimately sink in importance, while the Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the vast regions beyond will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter.

In sublime thought and prophetic vision he uttered these words on the floor of the United States Senate in 1852. And to-day the staging is set, the actors are here, and the nations gaze in wonder while that prophetic drama of the "world's great hereafter" is being enacted amid the glories and triumphs of old Pacific's busy regions.

And thus, with the grandest destiny and the freest Government yet born, we shall endure under our Constitution and our flag "as long as the stars twinkle through the loops of time."

Currency.

OF

HON. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 5, 1913.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a speech on currency by George Campbell, of Coffeyville, Kans.

The speech is as follows:

WHY RUSH THE SO-CALLED ADMINISTRATION CURRENCY BILL?

President Wilson seems desirous of rushing the currency bill through Congress, that the people may not have an opportunity to consider its provisions before it becomes a law, and it looks as though there was needed at this time a Jackson in the place of Wilson as Chief Executive of the Nation to protect and preserve the rights of the people.

Jackson in vetoing the rechartering of the United States Bank said that the press had been purchased and that the opposition to the bank measure could not find expression through the great metropolitan papers of that day; and what was true then with reference to the press is true to-day, and I speak from experience when I say the great dailies in our large cities will not publish any articles in opposition to the so-called administration currency bill; and hence the people only hear discussed one side of this measure, and that is from the side of the banker; and the great banking interests not only framed this so-called administration bill, but have been educating the people in the interests of the measure, and no doubt the President, before his election, agreed to do just what he is doing in forcing this measure, and perhaps this accounts for his alleged secret mission to New York City prior to his election; as the enacting of this bill into a law means much to the banking interests and will create the greatest and most dangerous monopoly that the world has ever known.

The so-called "administration currency bill" is, in fact, the Aldrich bill, which was framed by the bankers and is being pushed by them through the press and by the organization of citizens' leagues, lectures, and so forth; and the Republican Congress refused to enact this bill into a law, and even Senator Aldrich, it is said, refused to father this bill, and it was left without a parent until President Wilson adopted and acknowledged it as his offspring and christened it the "administration currency bill"; and this bill, by reason of amendments, is worse than the original Aldrich bill, for the Aldrich bill divided the territory of the United States into not less than 15 reserve districts, while the administration currency bill "sees them better" and divides the United States into not less than 12 Federal reserve districts, and each of these districts has a Federal reserve bank to eventually issue the currency for the banks in the district; and the banking corporations of the Federal reserve district are the stockholders of the Federal reserve bank, and the individual person can not purchase stock in the Federal reserve bank. He is barred from doing so, and the proposed banking system is much worse than our present banking system, for the individual can buy and hold stock in our present banks—National, State, or trust company—and can have something to say with reference to these financial institutions and how they are to be managed.

The banks under the proposed banking law will be intensely exclusive and will be above and beyond the reach of the people; and these Federal reserve districts are under the control of the Federal reserve board, which board consists of the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of the Treasury, and Comptroller of the Currency, and four other persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and as the President appoints the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency, all of the members of the Federal reserve board are appointees of the President, and this will put the banking interests actively in politics, as they will want a President elected who will appoint men on the Federal reserve board that are in the interests of the banking trusts; and if this bill becomes a law the probability is that the Government will not issue the $500,000,000 in Treasury notes, or any less sum, that the bill provides for, which is left to the discretion of the Federal reserve board; but the issue of paper currency will be left exclusively to the Federal reserve banks in the several reserve districts, and this giant banking trust, under a single head, as provided by the bill, will not only control the business of the country but the political destinies of the people, and everything in the line of business or politics will be centered in New York City. This is the object of the bill.

Under the present banking system our industries have expanded more than those of any other nation; and why rush the administration currency bill? There is no lack of money; there is nearly 40 per cent more idle money in the banks of the country than has ever been known in the history of the Nation; and while certain New York City banks have made a desperate effort to prevent banks from making loans to the people and thereby create a money stringency, they have not succeeded, as the great banking interests of New York City are unable to control our private banks and trust companies scattered throughout the land and under separate management; and hence the Banking Trust of New York City wants the so-called administration currency bill enacted into a law, which will give it full control of the money of the country.

The money interests of the East have for several years been alarmed at the rapid increase in the money volume, which has gradually grown since the time McKinley took office at the rate of nearly half a million a day; and provisions have been made so that men who mine the gold can take their product to the Government and do not have to wait to have it coined into money, but the Government will issue to the owner of the bullion gold certificates at the rate of $1 for every 25.8 grains of standard gold, and this measure has resulted in the gradual increase of the currency, and the money thus comes into circulation without being borrowed; but under the pending bank measure one of the central ideas is to get rid of all the money that is not borrowed from the banks and compel the people to borrow all the money necessary in transacting the business of the country, and this puts all business within the power of the banks; and if at any time the banks do not want to loan, there is no law to compel them to, or they can loan to one individual and not to his competitor, who has even better security for the loan, or they can loan to one individual or company at a lower rate of interest than to competitors and thereby destroy all competition and create a monopoly in all business, dominate labor, and wreck the Republic, the same as a similar banking system wrecked Rome.

If the Federal reserve banks are permitted to issue the currency, every bank note is an obligation of the bank to pay so much money, and represents that amount of indebtedness of the bank; and this note, representing nothing but debt, is loaned at interest to the people, and the Banking Trust will thus draw interest on what it owes, while all other persons and corporations must pay interest upon their notes representing their indebtedness; and this is a special privilege granted to the Banking Trust created by the bill that is not accorded to any other individual or corporation; and if the banks get full control of the money of the country, as proposed by the administration bill, and they conclude to take over the property of the people, they will then refuse to make loans and draw in their circulation and force the property on the market, and the banks will be the only ones that will have the money with which to purchase the property.

Pliny tells us that in the decline of Rome under a similar banking system as the one proposed by the administration bill the banks refused to make loans to the people, and the taxes became due, and the people had no money to pay them, and that whole provinces were often bid off by a single individual banker for the taxes due; and the Roman farm of 7 acres, which was the pride of the Roman citizens, disappeared, and the lands were aggregated into large estates, and the people became tenants, then serfs, and later were bought and sold with the land. Do we want this to happen to America?

Pliny, in describing the effects upon the people of this atrocious system, says:

> The people gave themselves up in despair in their fields, as beasts of burden lie down beneath their load and refuse to rise. The disintegration of society was complete. All public spirit, all generous emotions, all noble aspirations of men shriveled and disappeared as the volume of money shrank and prices fell.

In the present currency bill banks are exempt from all taxation, except on real estate, thus throwing the burden of taxation on others than the banks; and it is to be hoped that the patriotic citizens in the present Congress will see that this bill does not become a law; and if Mr. Wilson has promised the bankers of New York City to force this bill through Congress, he should at least give the people an opportunity to consider its several provisions before it becomes a law, for it is a deep-laid scheme to subvert our institutions of government and not only control but to own the business interests of the country and the people who toil, and the bill is so framed that outside of the few Wall Street bankers it is not understood by the bankers themselves.

The so-called administration currency bill is not a recent measure, but leading bankers of London, Berlin, and New York have been working on this scheme for years. To keep the people ignorant of the measure, it looks as though the press has been subsidized and citizens' leagues have been organized, scattered throughout the country, and advocates have been employed, including press agents, to combat any opposition that might be developed at any point throughout the United States.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK was evidently the choice of the Democratic voters of the United States for President; but when Mr. CLARK made his speech before the Trans-Mississippi Congress, and took exceptions to the Aldrich bank bill (now the administration currency bill), a prominent banker of New York, high in financial circles, said:

> This puts CHAMP CLARK out of the race; the banking interests have a thorough organization and unlimited means at their command, and they will adopt such measures as may be necessary at the convention to defeat CLARK and nominate Wilson.

And subsequent events show this man was not talking through his hat.

The Republican Congress refused to enact the so-called Aldrich bill into a law, and the special interests then turned to the Democratic Party, as they always do, to make it a "scapegoat" to force measures upon the people by their caucus rules that would be impossible to force upon the people under Republican rule.

It will be remembered that when the revenues of the Government accumulated beyond its needs under Republican rule back in the eighties that Government bonds were largely retired until there was only enough bonds for an issue of $171,000,000 in national-bank currency; and the banks took up the cry for an additional bond issue by the Government, that the bonds might be used as a basis for an additional issue of national-bank currency; but the Republicans did not see the necessity for more bonds, and such men as John Sherman began to advocate the Government issue of the currency, as advocated by Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, and stating that the profits derived from the issue of currency, by reason of bills being lost or destroyed should go to the Government—that is, to the whole people—instead of to the banks; and hence the great banking interests in New York caused the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland, and he carried out the wishes of Wall Street and forced the issue of United States bonds until they reached many millions of dollars, and this was accomplished by the most shameful methods.

The Government of the United States would deposit the paper money in the banks, and the banks would take this currency to the United States Treasurer and have it redeemed in gold, and by this means the gold in the Treasury was soon exhausted, and bonds were issued to replenish the gold reserve, and then the paper currency was presented and the gold again drawn out and more bonds issued, and this created what was termed at the time "the endless chain" to draw the gold out of the Treasury, and this method continued until our Government debt was greatly increased without cause, except that Wall Street wanted more bonds as a basis for the issue of more national-bank currency; and this endless chain continued until a clamor arose on the part of the people, and Mr. Cleveland stopped the endless chain by employing J. Pierpont Morgan to protect the gold reserve in the United States Treasury; and thus was presented to the world the humiliating spectacle of a great nation, with its billions of gold and other property, having to employ Mr. Morgan, an individual, to protect the gold in the Treasury; and all this was done in the name of Democracy. And Mr. Morgan, it is said, made many millions of dollars, and was enabled before his death to control one-ninth of the entire property of the United States. And now the special interests, acting through Wall Street, have by far a greater scheme to perpetrate on the American people in what is known as the "administration currency bill," and they have chosen Democracy to do their bidding; and the steam-roller process is in full operation, and even Bryan falls in line and supports this anti-Democratic measure, and his simple democracy that he displayed several years ago has undergone a change, so it requires more than $12,000 per year to sustain it, and yet he and Mr. Wilson claim to be followers of Jefferson and Jackson.

If Jackson could look at his so-called followers, he would probably be disposed to use his favorite quotation in addressing them, and we do not have to stretch the imagination greatly to see him point his bony finger at those who claim to be Democrats and say, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, into everlasting torment, prepared for the devil and his angels."

If the administration is bound to change the present banking system, why not give the people a Democratic measure, as advocated by Jefferson and Jackson? Let the Government furnish all the paper currency in the form of United States notes, and loan these notes to the national, State, and private banks on proper security at 1 or 2 per cent per annum interest. Each bank will then deal direct with the Government and there can be no combination or trust created and the money will always be available for business and there can be no money panic, and the Government will derive a large income from the issue of these notes, and all the people will be benefited.

The so-called administration currency bill not only contemplates a change in our financial system, but is a blow to our republican institutions of government; and without stopping to point out in detail how our Government can be changed if the present bill becomes a law, and why a change is contemplated by those who framed the bill, it will be remembered that Mr. Lincoln said in 1858 that the States of the Union could not exist half slave and half free; that here was presented two antagonistic ideas in government brought in close contact in the government of the States, and that one idea had to overcome the other, and in the near future the governments of the States must of necessity be all slave or all free.

What was true of the governments of the States at that time is now true of the governments of the world. Steam and electricity have annihilated distance and time, and the monarchies and republics of the world are now in closer contact than were the States of the Union in 1858, and this close contact of the nations must bring about a homogeneous government for the entire world, and in the near future the governments of the world will be all republics or all monarchies.

All the nations of the earth are now preparing for this final contest, and the American Republic is the only great power that the monarchies of the world have to reckon with in their conflict for the supremacy of the world.

They can not conquer America by force of arms; it is invincible to any force that can be brought against it, and if the American Republic is destroyed its destruction must be wrought by its own people, by a banking system similar to the one proposed, that will aggregate the wealth of the country in few hands, the same as was the case with Rome, where 3 per cent of her people owned 97 per cent of her wealth.

The Rubicon is now before the American people in the so-called administration currency bill, and it seems that Mr. Wilson has seen the "heavenly vision" and has heard the voice from Wall Street bidding him to cross. But let him pause for a moment until the people can express themselves. They will tell him that a crown of thorns and a cross of gold is just as objectionable when applied by so-called Democrats as when attempted to be applied by Republicans. They will say to him, "You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold," in the interest of a coterie of bankers of Wall Street, London, and Berlin.

Lake Mohonk Indian Conference.

OF
HON. DORSEY W. SHACKLEFORD,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 5, 1913.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address delivered by the Hon. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, of Oklahoma, at the Mohonk conference in October, 1913.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE HON. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, OF OKLAHOMA, AT LAKE MOHONK INDIAN CONFERENCE, OCTOBER, 1913.

Mr. Chairman, before proceeding upon the discussion of the subject "Toward 'restricted' and 'unrestricted' Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, should the law and its administration be the same?" I desire to thank most sincerely Mr. Smiley, Mr. Phillips, and others of this conference, the successors of the late Mr. and Mrs. Albert K. Smiley, who for a quarter of a century had unselfishly devoted their time and means toward the uplift of the aboriginal Americans, for this invitation and opportunity to discuss these minor phases of the Indian problems.

In the beginning let it be understood that the word "restricted" Indian means those who have some restriction upon the alienation of all or any portion of their allotment and homestead. Mark you, such restrictions apply only to the land and run with its title rather than upon the person of the individual, since under the laws, both Federal and State, the Indian in Oklahoma enjoys the privilege of the ballot and the right to be elected to public office, and is every other way classed as a white man under our constitution. The Federal laws provide that all members of the Five Civilized Tribes—Chickasaws, Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles—who are of more than three-quarter blood shall have both their homestead and the other half of their allotment—called the surplus—with restriction thereon against the sale or alienation, except where removal may be made by the department upon application therefor; and all of less than three-quarter blood and more than half blood have restrictions upon their homestead only, leaving the other half wholly under the control of the Indian, to sell as to his judgment seems best; and all of less than half blood have no restriction upon the sale or alienation of any portion of their allotment or homestead—all of this without reference to the age of the Indian allottee—and this last class of less than half blood are known as "unrestricted" Indians. The other two classes are known as "restricted" Indians in our common parlance.

Now, the question should the administration of the law and the provisions thereof be the same with reference to both? Of course when age is not taken into consideration the restricted minor can sell his land by a sort of combined authority of the probate courts, subject to approval of the department at Washington, while minors of the unrestricted class have their lands sold through guardians, approved by the probate or county courts, in Oklahoma. I wish to state that as a race there is no prejudice against the members of the Five Civilized Tribes, or practically none, neither in the matter of social affairs nor in the matter of legislation. I can bear witness to this fact, having been president of the constitutional convention of the State and speaker of the first house of representatives which vitalized its provisions, and that although social and legal restrictions were made against the negro, little, if any, was shown in defining the privileges and rights of the Indian. In our constitution you will find this definition of the races:

"Negro race" shall include all persons of African descent; "white," or "white race," shall include all others.

In the administration of the law, however, the grafter, having no regard for persons, fell upon those where they might effectuate their madness for greed, and it will readily be seen that the easiest points of attack are upon the full bloods and the minor children, irrespective of quantum of blood, through probate courts. In the case of the full blood they are unable to make much headway in the matter of acquiring title, but seek by lease contracts to encumber or becloud the title in such a way that in event of removal of restrictions purchasers will be reduced almost to themselves. There is one land copartnership—not a corporation, because the constitution of Oklahoma forbids corporate ownership of land—which copartnership is said to control by lease at least 250,000 acres in the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations, the lands mostly of restricted Indians. They hope to retain these lands and secure legislation some time in the future that will enable them to buy up this land, and if permitted to do so would not only injure the Indian but would violate the best policy of State, in this, that it would not be sold in small tracts or fall into the hands of home owners, who would live upon and cultivate the land, but into the hands of a few who would rent or lease it out to white tenants to the detriment of wholesome public policy.

But the greatest evil, particularly to the Indian himself, is in the case of the probate of the minors' estates, and although the first legislature enacted a statute seeking to punish probate judges—and some of them have been punished under this statute—here and there a county judge will win success upon some private agreement to do the bidding of the grafter who has so beset the Indians everywhere. Estates of minors are probated and sold without necessity therefor, and then, in counties where honest men hold these positions, it is even done by deception and by false information presented to the court. In 1910 I was touring one county making speeches in company with the county judge. A very intelligent and shrewd intermarried citizen hailed us and came up and shook hands with us. After leaving him, the county judge remarked:

I am going to send that fellow to the penitentiary. He made false representations to my court that one of his children's land should be sold. I made the order, and he has sold the land and squandered the money. I am going to cancel the deed, with a view of bringing him before the criminal court.

I knew this intermarried citizen well. He was very intelligent and had been a member of the tribe for many years. I knew he had a regard for the welfare of his own children; I knew he was faithful to his wife, and yet the patrimony of his own children, through his extravagance and wasteful methods, was becoming squandered in their minority when they could not help themselves. Other illustrations I might give of fraud and connivance on part of the Indian to secure the property of his own child, but I recite this particular instance to show the evil effect, even where no wrong was intended, of permitting the sale of the lands of minors.

In the administration by the department they have overlooked the fact that there was a distinction between the "restricted" and "unrestricted," when, as a matter of truth, their authority over the restricted class, not only in the matter of alienation, but in the improving, leasing, or other encumbering of the lands, both surplus and homestead, should be more completely under the control of the department, with a view of preventing a clouding of the title; whereas upon the unrestricted class, and even some of the partially restricted class, the rule of the department should be relaxed so as to give over to the Indian complete control touching the alienation, leasing, or encumbering of his own property, but I would confine this wholly to the adult Indian, irrespective of his quantum of blood.

If this were done you would take away the effort of the intelligent class to widen restrictions and break down departmental authority upon all classes, and it would concentrate the attention of the department upon those alone which need and require departmental attention, and these it could better serve. It would lessen the tendency of political influence in favor of removing all departmental control, because the argument is invariably made, giving the instance of those who can control as proof that all restrictions should be removed. In my opinion, all persons of less than three-quarter blood should have absolute control over the sale and alienation of their property, provided they are adults. In the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, if not in all the other Five Civilized Tribes, I would close the doors against either departmental removal or sale, or authority of probate courts to sell any minor child's land, limiting them only to the question of leasing out the property, and that with a view of having it improved in the case of full bloods, and collect the rents or adequate compensation for their property in the case of the restricted or unrestricted child. I do not look with such horror upon the adult Indian, even though he be a full blood who would squander his estate and has but a few years in which to live anyway, as I do upon the sale of property of a child, especially since the child itself can not have any control and when it becomes of age looks back over the scene and realizes that it once had valuable property and would, upon becoming of age, yet own that property but for some probate court or some careless, dishonest, or unthinking guardian. It is enough to make of such Indian child an anarchist, while it will surely make paupers of them all. Such a policy does not even admit of the "survival of the fittest," because the child may be ever so intelligent, ever so well prepared for citizenship upon becoming of age, for his condition financially is hopeless after his property has thus been squandered. There is very little need, anyway, for the sale of a minor Indian's land in the Five Civilized Tribes, especially in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, where they have equal advantages for education. Our State, since its admission into the Union in 1907, has erected more schoolhouses than were erected in the first 40 years of either of its neighbor States. It has more than 20 higher institutions of learning, a greater number than any two of the surrounding States.

Ample provision is made by the State to educate all. Besides, in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, where the allottee has no less than 160 acres of the very best land, or 320 acres of the average allotable land, if this land is rightly managed, when improved the rents and profits therefrom will be sufficient to meet all the economic wants of the child. Besides this, quite a sum of money per capita is due them by the Government, and this should be paid out to them and not held, as now held, by the Government in favored banks who use these deposits for their own benefit. It will be quite sufficient to improve their lands. Upon adult Indians the restrictions should be removed upon all classes, upon all property, up to the degree of three-quarter blood, and the money of all classes of less than three-quarter blood should be paid out to them, and paid immediately, and the hand of the Government taken off of them. The baneful effect of partial restriction can not be described. It hampers the Government and leaves the Indian helpless. Tendency should be either to an entire restriction or no restriction. There is no reason why this class of Indians should have their business at all controlled by the department, and, so far as they are concerned, their property should be capitalized, paid to them, and let the department go out of business as far as it relates to them, to the end that it, as I said before, could concentrate its attention on the remaining class of full bloods or those of more than three-quarter blood. Let the doors be closed against the sale of any minor's land unless it dies, and, indeed, all Indians of whatever age, after death, should have their lands sold under proper restriction either by the Government in the case of the restricted Indian or by the State authorities in the case of the unrestricted Indian. I desire to quote here from the Democratic State platform of 1912, and I may say that this is the view of practically everybody in our State with reference to this Indian problem so far as it speaks upon it:

We favor the sale of the coal lands and coal deposits and the disposal of all Indian tribal property, and the immediate distribution of all funds due the Indian, including just compensation for their lands, known as the "leased district," agreeable to treaty pledges. We oppose the reopening of the tribal rolls, which would result in unsettled conditions and, by fraud and perjury, admit persons to a participation in tribal estate not entitled to such division. We favor such legislation by Congress as will settle Indian land titles, alike just to the Indian and to the white purchaser and homeseeker. The Democratic Party stands for an honest policy and for keeping our pledges to the Indian. It believes it equally wrong to permit the robber by law or its administration of either the white man or the Indian. We are opposed to the taking by the Government of the Indian trust funds, amounting to millions of dollars, in paying salaries and expenses of Federal officeholders and departmental appointees, after agreeing by solemn treaty pledges to pay such expenses by the Federal Government. * * * Their imbecility and venal policy have disturbed business and produced conditions to the extent of retarding immigration in the east half of the State. On this question throughout America, with all tribes of these dependent peoples, for all the years of its long administration and power, the charge is justified * * *.—The author of a Century of Crime.

You will observe that emphatic language is used with reference to having closed the Indian rolls and for paying out the money. Upon this point and all points, so far as expressed in this platform pledge, there is little or no difference between the honest men of all political parties of our State and is the express desire of all classes of Indians themselves. This pledge does not carry anything with reference to the further removal of restrictions or the handling of the lands or to the question of minors, as are herein discussed, for the reason that differences of opinion prevail in Oklahoma upon these particular points, but it may safely be said that all good citizens of Oklahoma, irrespective of party or race, are for this platform as far as it gives expression. I reproduce it with a view of informing this conference as to the best thought of our citizens.

I see time fails me, and I can not longer discuss this important subject; but to recapitulate:

First, I would remove all restrictions from all adult Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of less than three-quarter blood.

Second. I would give the department greater authority over the control of the entire property of those of more than three-quarter blood, particularly in the matter of the lease and improvement of their lands.

Third. I would stop the sale of the real estate of the minors on all their lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and upon the homestead in the other three of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Fourth. I would sell all the remaining tribal property—property owned in common—including the lands unallotted, coal and asphalt property, capitalize the funds due them, and pay to each and all of them their shares.

Fifth. I would clear the title to these lands which have been erroneously sold through mistake of law by permitting the purchaser in good faith to pay to the Indian, or to the Government for him, the value of the lands.

The adoption of all these policies by the Government would first stop the demand of the "citizenship grafter" who desires to reopen the rolls, because there would be no property for him to acquire, even if he should be enrolled; and upon this point I call the attention of the conference to the thousands of dollars paid out by these tribes to protect themselves from this most gigantic fraud. When the common property is disposed of and the money is paid out there will be no incentive for a repetition of this fraud, while as it now is there are two sets of attorneys in Washington at this time, with contingent fees from eight to twelve millions of dollars, trying to enroll in the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations alone 8,000 "freebooters" who have no more right to citizenship than the members of this conference, but who would take from this tribal estate some $48,000,000. This policy would do another thing. It would concentrate the mind of the country, and especially Congress and the department, upon the proper protection of every class needing protection. The closing of the doors upon the sale of the land of minors will stop the frauds in the probate courts and leave the minor, when he becomes of age, the right to sell his property as any other adult under the policy thus laid down.

It will work a wholesome policy in our State by breaking up the great land-grafting syndicates, relieving the land of its clouded title, so that when sold it will bring its real value and ultimately cause its purchase by a home seeker and settler, which will serve a broad public policy in the interest of the State, the general public, and the Indians themselves.

In a word, it will put out of business our two greatest classes of grafters—land and citizenship grafters—those seeking property by getting themselves placed on the Indian rolls.

Universal Peace.

OF

HON. FRANK O. SMITH,

OF MARYLAND.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 5, 1913,

On House joint resolution 146.

"Whereas the narrow coast strip of southeastern Alaska keeps one-third of western Canada from the free use of the most direct route to the Pacific; and

"Whereas this unnatural boundary, created in response to conditions which have long ceased to exist, hampers the development of the adjoining lands and gives rise to an irritation which must become more and more acute as population and commerce increase; and

"Whereas the celebration of the one hundred years' peace between Great Britain and America should not be confined to mere ceremonies, but should include a deed proving the sincerity and earnestness of the participants; and

"Whereas nothing could accomplish that object more happily than the removal of a standing source of irritation between the United States and Canada; and

"Whereas that act would be the most eloquent example of the policy of mutual concessions necessary to establish universal peace: Therefore be it

"Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to negotiate with the British and Canadian Governments regarding the transfer of southeastern Alaska to Canada by sale or exchange, or both."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, renewed attention has been drawn to Alaska by House joint resolution 121, introduced by Mr. ALBERT JOHNSON, of Washington, on August 26, for a strategic railway to connect Alaska with the United States. His argument (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sept. 10, p. 5078) mentions the resolution introduced by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas on February 7 and again on May 15 (H. J. Res. 83) to cede southeastern Alaska to Canada in exchange for an equivalent.

The purpose of the Stephens resolution is not only to promote good feeling between the United States and Canada, but also to take a decisive step toward universal peace. The reasoning is very simple. Peace is not possible without an executive power to enforce it. An international executive power to enforce universal peace can not be organized until the leading nations make certain mutual concessions. The purpose of the Stephens resolution is to advocate these mutual concessions by the most persuasive, the most inoffensive method—that of example, by making a model concession to Canada.

Various circumstances render it desirable that this subject be brought before the public at this moment. Accordingly, in the absence of Mr. STEPHENS, I have been asked to introduce the resolution in briefer form and to accompany it with a detailed argument. I gladly comply with the request, because it deals with what I consider the most important problem of the day—the union of the white race as the only means to maintain its supremacy.

I am pleased to note that Mr. JOHNSON's ultimate object is the same as Mr. STEPHENS's and mine—the promotion of universal peace—and that we are also in complete accord as to the most practical means, to wit, an international executive power consisting of the four leading white nations, Britain, France, Germany, and the United States. For the sake of clearness I will quote that part of Mr. JOHNSON's argument dealing with this subject:

> You are aware of the widespread movement for peace. Mr. Nobel has given $1,800,000 to it; Mr. Ginn, $1,000,000; Mr. Carnegie, $10,000,000. Thousands of people all over the globe are studying night and day how to solve this problem of universal peace. Here is a way, the surest way, probably the only way; at any rate, the way in which all existing peace has been brought about: By the consolidation of the existing areas of internal peace, a consolidation which in the past was accomplished for the most part by conquest, in a few cases by voluntary union under external pressure. One more consolidation and the area of internal peace will become worldwide. Anyone can see that the four great powder-making nations, the four great gun-making, machine-using, coal-mining, shipbuilding, money-owning, technically trained nations, representing probably nine-tenths of the world's industry, would together constitute such an overwhelming power as to make war henceforth impossible. It would mean the almost immediate arrest of armaments and their gradual reduction to a mere fraction of their present size. Not only would our insurance policy cost us nothing, but it would greatly reduce our present expenditure. This union of the four leading nations we can bring about by simply creating an organization for the purpose.
> Gentlemen, we all love our country. We should like to see her exalted above all nations, not, indeed, by the sham glory that comes from success in killing and smashing, but by the real glory described in the Master's words:
> But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.
> Service rendered to humanity is the only true title to glory. It affords us pleasure to know that we own one of the most favored lands on the globe; we love to contemplate its broad expanse of 3,000 miles from ocean to ocean, all speaking one language, governed by the same institutions; we are somehow proud to think that the largest river on the globe is ours from source to mouth; that we are the richest nation in the world; that Fulton, Morse, Bell, Edison, Burbank, Peary, Langley, Wright brothers are ours; that from our shore sprang that fresh wind of liberty which swept the miasma of despotism from France, and thence, with multiplied force, invaded and cleansed the globe. But all these are merely fortunate accidents, the free gifts of nature; our pride in recounting them is the rich man's pride in surveying his heirlooms. Can we discover in the 137 years of our history even one grand, noble national deed which we performed not from necessity nor for selfish gain, but from sheer love of right? Let us confess that our conduct, considering all the circumstances, has been neither nobler nor wiser than that of the other civilized nations. We need not be ashamed of this. Opportunities to perform noble deeds can not be made to order; we must wait till fortune offers them, which in her best humor she does only once or twice in a century. But if fortune did offer us an opportunity to render a transcending service to humanity of our own free choice, and thus to confer the truest glory on our country, we should be a sorry, sleepy set of patriots if our only answer were a vacant stare. Take time by the forelock, for he is bald behind.
> Such an opportunity presents itself at this moment. The great boon for which the world longs to-day is permanent universal peace. This boon, I feel convinced, we are in a position to bestow on humanity, and thus to prove that we deserve the favors which nature has lavished on us above all other nations. If we refused to do it, Thanksgiving Day would become a feast of insincerity, self-condemned to the reproach, "This people honoreth Me with their lips, but their hearts are far from Me." I feel sure that this will not happen. Our people as a whole are sincere, fair-minded, and gentlemanly, and their love of peace is deep and earnest. If they find that there is a practical way of assuring permanent peace and that they have the gift in their own hands to bestow, with no loss to themselves but with decided material gain, and that by so doing they can secure for their Nation the glory of the most brilliant, most beneficent national deed in history, and thus permanently enthrone her in the place of honor among the nations, they will not be so drowsy, so negligent, so unpatriotic as to let the opportunity slip. All that is needed is to bring the plan to their attention and to set it forth as clearly as language will permit. This I will try to do. I will try to describe—
> I. The essential agency needed to maintain universal peace, to wit, an international executive power.
> II. The potent instrument which fortune has placed in our hands to enable us to bring that international executive power into existence.
> I.—AN INTERNATIONAL EXECUTIVE POWER TO ENFORCE PEACE.
> HOW PEACE GREW.
> The physician who wishes to cure does not simply exhort his patient to get well; he tries to ascertain the causes of the ailment and to discover the means of removing these causes. If we want peace, we must not content ourselves with saying: "Little children, love one another." We must study the causes of war with a view to their removal, the causes of peace with a view to giving them full play.
> The first thing that strikes our attention is the fact that peace to-day is well-nigh universal, whereas 2,000 years ago war was well-nigh universal. Evidently somebody or something has already been at work promoting peace and has done it very effectually. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The process which, by its natural action, without any deliberate plan, has made peace nearly universal is surely most apt to make it quite universal, especially with a little aid from those who desire to promote peace. What was that process? It was the consolidation of the areas of internal peace. This was in nearly all cases accomplished by conquest; practically all the peace that ever existed was the fruit of war. The devil was driven out by Beelzebub, prince of devils. The conquerors were the unintentional peacemakers. Their object, of course, was not peace, but the increase of their own wealth and power, which they could only gain by conquest; but in order to conquer their neighbors they had to husband their own resources, which could only be done by enforcing internal peace within their own domain. When as a result of this tighter control of their own force they subdued other tribes, they made their own area of internal peace coalesce with other areas of internal peace into one great area of internal peace, putting an end to the chance of war between the several areas thus united. Peace over a wider area led at once to an advance in civilization and a greater accumulation of material resources, adding to the conqueror's power and enabling him to achieve still great conquests; that is to say, to make additional areas of internal peace coalesce with his own. In this way great empires grew up, each maintaining internal peace over wide territories and long periods, while the centers of these empires—that is to say, the king's residence and the commercial towns—attracted the superior minds and developed an intellectual breed of men, which, in the leisure of peace and with the wealth created by peace, built up the edifice of civilization. The best-known example is the famous Pax Romana. The process was often reversed; empire after empire crumbled into fragments whenever the central unifying force grew too weak to resist the internal strains or the shock of barbarian invasion; but in the long run the centripetal forces prevailed over the centrifugal. As civilization advanced and the means of communication and armament grew more perfect the more powerful States were enabled not only to annex more and more of the smaller ones, but to keep them annexed. Thus the areas of internal peace, by continued consolidation, grew larger and larger and fewer and fewer until the globe to-day is practically occupied by a dozen great political structures, each maintaining complete or nearly complete internal peace.
> The thousands of little independent warring States of the day of barbarism have become peaceable provinces—and for the most part willing, comfortable provinces—in the day of civilization. Hardly a dozen of these provinces, in Europe at least, would care to resume their former barbarous, penurious, nominal, caricature independence even if it were offered to them. Having been whipped into union and enriched and civilized by it, and drilled for centuries into the habit of looking on it as their greatest blessing, having been endowed by it with real independence—that is to say, increased power to control their own destiny, increased opportunities for individual development, individual happiness—they now look upon union as part of their nature just as much as mountains and valleys are part of the earth's face, and they take no little credit to themselves for the "lofty patriotism" which inspires this sentiment, in utter oblivion of the thumps and whacks and brutal outrage by which they were cowed into submission to the conqueror's will and made to coalesce into a nation, forced to greet the abhorred "hereditary enemy" as a countryman, to exchange the old patriotism for the new, often to abandon even the old language, the old religion. "Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows."

HOW PEACE WILL GROW.

No one can study this process without arriving at the conclusion that eternal peace is within reach and will be ours as soon as we have sense enough, resolution enough, public spirit enough to grasp it. Let there be one more consolidation; let a sufficient number of the existing areas of internal peace be united into a power stronger than all the rest together—and perpetual peace is assured.

In the interest of civilization, of peace itself, the nations forming this union must evidently be not only the strongest but also the most enlightened, humane, peace-loving, in brief, those to whom the destinies of humanity may most safely be intrusted. Everyone knows who these nations are—Britain, France, Germany, and the United States. Evidently the consolidation of these four areas of internal peace would at once make peace world-wide and permanent. They would form a nucleus whose magnetism would almost instantly attract most of the other European States, thus virtually insuring European union. That a countercombination consisting of all the other powers could ever be effected is inconceivable; but even if it were practicable it could not, under present circumstances, make headway against the quadruple league and its adherents.

That this is the surest and quickest way of arriving at universal peace was recognized long ago by the foremost leader and most munificent patron of the peace movement, Mr. Carnegie, in his widely quoted letter to the president of the Thirteenth Universal Peace Congress, held at Boston, October 3–8, 1904. The letter is printed on page 53 of the proceedings of the congress, copies of which may be obtained from the American Peace Society, Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.:

SKIBO CASTLE,
Dornoch, Sutherland, Scotland, September 27, 1904.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I much regret missing the meeting of the International Peace Conference. Since we have at last in The Hague tribunal a permanent high court for the settlement of international disputes more and more my thoughts turn upon the next possible and necessary step forward to an agreement by certain powers to prevent appeals to war by civilized nations.

Suppose, for instance, that Britain, France, Germany, and America, with such minor States as would certainly join them, were to take that position, prepared, if defied, to enforce peaceful settlement, the first offender (if ever there were one) being rigorously dealt with, war would at one fell swoop be banished from the earth. For such a result surely the people of these four countries would be willing to risk much. The risk, however, would be trifling. A strong combination would efface it altogether. I think this one simple plan most likely to commend itself to the intelligent masses. A committee might be formed to consider this. If a body of prominent men of each nation agreed to unite in urging the cooperation of their respective countries in the movement, I think the idea would soon spread.

One can not imagine for our Republic a prouder position than that of pioneer in such a task—her who has been foremost in urging arbitration, first also to urge five important powers to submit their differences to the court of peace. Nor can I imagine more fitting apostles to urge this upon the powers than our present Secretary of State [John Hay], who is to honor you at the coming meeting in Boston, and our present President [Theodore Roosevelt], who recently led the powers to The Hague. Having secured a permanent court for the settlement of international disputes, the time seems ripe for the same agencies to consider the one step further needed to complete the work.

Very truly yours, always for peace,

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

Essentially the same idea was advanced by ex-President Roosevelt in his address before the Nobel peace prize committee at Christiania, Norway, May 5, 1910, as printed in the Advocate of Peace, the organ of the American Peace Society, June, 1910:

Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others. The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power, to enforce the decrees of the court. In any community of any size the authority of the courts rests upon actual or potential force, on the existence of a police, or on the knowledge that the able-bodied men of the country are both ready and willing to see that the decrees of judicial and legislative bodies are put into effect. In new and wild communities where there is violence an honest man must protect himself; and until other means of securing his safety are devised it is both foolish and wicked to persuade him to surrender his arms while the men who are dangerous to the community retain theirs. He should not renounce the right to protect himself by his own efforts until the community is so organized that it can effectively relieve the individual of the duty of putting down violence. So it is with nations. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be secured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions. The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

THE QUADRILATERAL TRUST OF CIVILIZATION.

When business men find that they can not bankrupt their competitors or force them to sell out, and that by cutting one another's financial throats they are all reducing their profits to an uncomfortable minimum, they form a trust and enjoy a comfortable monopoly with a maximum of profit. The era of unlimited competition is everywhere passing into the era of trusts. The great nations are well aware that their present uncompromising competition, so long as it does not lead to the bankruptcy of one or more of them, with resulting absorption, checks the progress of all and condemns them to a life of insecurity and anxiety. What more natural than that the four leading competitors for power, each claiming to be the champion of civilization, should form a trust of civilization, enjoying a monopoly of power and an absolute guaranty of security! Instead of checking they would then have every reason to promote one another's growth. The globe would practically become their joint property, to be parceled out among them into spheres of influence. The four-legged horse of peace would take good care that its pasture shall not be wasted by war.

With less than four legs the horse of peace would be a cripple; a fifth leg would be an encumbrance. Four nations, neither more nor less, are required. To attempt to include in the initial combination more powers than will suffice to make it predominant would be highly imprudent, for the more internal strain you introduce the greater will be the risk of making your league just as inefficient, just as impotent as the so-called European concert, which is simply a deadlock, a mutual paralysis of conflicting interests, an agreement to do nothing. The partners in an efficient concert must be bound together not by mere papers but by common interests; in fact, a brief study of history, an elementary knowledge of human nature, shows that no nation will join such a concert merely to advance the cause of peace, but solely to gain some advantage for itself. We have to base our calculations on the ascertained coefficients of our building material. We have to work with men not as we should like to have them but as evolution has made them. As a necessary result of evolution the controlling element of each nation consists largely of Philistines, characterized by a dominant acquisitive instinct which demands immediate, tangible benefits, first, for the Philistine's own precious self; next, for his town; third, for his nation. Beyond that circle the Philistine's sympathy is a mere twilight; the general welfare of humanity cuts a small figure with him. Hence the more partners you introduce the greater will be the difficulty of reconciling their interests. A triple alliance would be preferable to a quadruple; a dual alliance would be better still; and a single power, as in the palmy days of Rome, would be best of all, if it could be made predominant. That, however, is at present incompatible with statistics. Not one of the four nations can be omitted. Britain will not unite with Germany if this involves the giving up of her present virtual alliance with France. If you try to exclude Germany, the German-Americans will veto any closer approach between the United States and Britain.

In a word, eternal peace is assured if Britain, France, and Germany can be made to unite. The United States would automatically join the league of her parent nations, all the more readily because the strength of the league would thus become so overwhelming that the occasion for using it in military operations would never arise. How, then, can the three great areas of internal peace in western Europe be consolidated? Conquest, the great agency of consolidation, is evidently out of the question in this case. There remains the other alternative—voluntary union. There have been a few cases in which nations have united voluntarily, the most notable being the Swiss Cantons, the Netherlands, and, most conspicuous, the 25 States of Germany. In every one of these cases the driving, whipping force was once more the pressure of conquest—not accomplished, but imminent. There is probably not a single instance on record where nations united voluntarily except as a last resort to avoid subjugation. So rational is the rational animal, so moral the moral animal. "Give us this day our daily quarrel" is the habitual prayer of a good-sized fraction of humanity, and even well-meaning people, having been drilled into the belief that "independence" is their greatest good, will not consent to enjoy it in greater perfection and security through union with their nearest kin except under compulsion. Cling to the name and never mind the substance. The Germans before 1870 knew perfectly well that they could not have real independence except through union, yet they continued to prefer the nominal to the real independence, and would probably be a chaos of wrangling States to-day had not France rendered them the inestimable service of driving them into union. "Spare the rod and spoil the child," the loathsome maxim of a barbarous pedagogy, is evidently indispensable in the political education of those big children called nations.

The external pressure which may be expected to squeeze Britain, France, Germany, and the United States into union has been well described by my fellow legislator, Mr. ALBERT JOHNSON—the growing power of eastern Asia, which threatens within a few years to drive Britain out of India and Australia, France out of Indo-China, Holland out of the Dutch East Indies, and, thus reenforced, to swallow Siberia and finally overwhelm Russia herself and bring countless Mongol hosts once more to the frontier of Germany, as in 1241. In the face of this common danger the continuance of disunion among the great white nations is really a piece of childish levity. Their motive for union is at least as strong as that which whipped the Germans into union in 1870. And let me predict that when once the habit of disunion is broken, when the four nations have for a few years lived in the fireproof, burglar-proof, impregnable House of Union, secure as Paradise itself, when its modern improvements have become a necessity to them, when they have tasted the power and prosperity that comes from union, when each one of them has through the support of the others gained the long-coveted prizes that were sour grapes to it in its isolation, they will not dream of dissolving the union any more than the Germans dream of returning to their old condition of fragmentation, the anxiety and humiliation of which they can not now recall without a shudder. "Put Germany in the saddle; she will ride all right," said Bismarck to the croakers who before 1870 shook their wise heads in solemn doubt whether Germany could remain united. It took a war to hoist the hesitating, kicking lady into the saddle of union, but no sooner was she seated than she exclaimed, "My, what an improvement on walking! Why did I ever kick? And oh, what chances I missed by not getting into the saddle 50 years ago." It will take a vast machinery of persuasion, consummate engineering skill, and self-oblivious devotion and perseverance to hoist the quadrilateral trust into the saddle of union; but once in, it will never dismount.

OUR DUTY TO TAKE THE INITIATIVE.

The United States has three urgent motives for taking the lead in the movement:

First. We are threatened by the same danger. Years ago the leaders of the Asiatics gave notice in no uncertain tones that they do not intend to submit to being excluded from white men's colonies any longer than they can help. This means that when Asia becomes united—and the larger part of it, China, is already united—we shall have a desperate, hopeless war on our hands unless we open our door wide to Asiatic immigration, which would mean the gradual submergence of the white race in this country. If we are able to see an inch beyond our noses, we can not fail to perceive that our only hope of safety lies in the timely union of the white race. Twenty years from now all our wealth may not suffice to purchase the security which to-day we can get for nothing, to enjoy forever, if we will but grasp it. If we have not sufficient foresight and resolution to bestir ourselves at once, if we continue to consider ephemeral trifles as "more important" than the safety of the white race, we shall simply prove once more that—

Men are but children of a larger growth.

Second. The United States is already looked upon as the leader in the peace movement. The bestowal of eternal peace on humanity would be the greatest glory that our Nation could gain. That pearl of great price is worth almost any effort, almost any sacrifice.

Third. No other nation can take the lead so easily. The jealousy and suspicion prevailing among European nations are so great that any proposal by one nation is at once denounced by the jingoes of the other nations as a deep-laid plot, and is thus almost inevitably foredoomed to failure. Nobody in the world suspects the United States of sinister designs, and thus any move that we make on behalf of union will be taken at its full face value.

If, indeed, we were sure that the pressure of the Asiatic danger would drive Britain, France, and Germany into union in time to assure their own and our safety, we should have no urgent motive for trying to hasten the process. There are, in fact, plenty of enlightened men on the other side of the water who see the danger just as clearly as we do and are earnestly entreating their countrymen to drop their quarrels and combine for the common defense. Foremost among them is the Emperor of Germany, who for 20 years has lost no opportunity to urge European union, having called attention to the yellow peril as far back as 1895 in his famous warning, "Völker Europas, wahret eure höchsten Güter!" (Peoples of Europe, protect your highest interests). "Practical men," "cool heads," will smilingly tell you not to cross that bridge until you get to it; that the white nations will combine of their own accord as soon as the danger becomes serious; and that meantime common sense requires you to concentrate your attention on "more important (?) matters."

Unfortunately, when the time comes to cross the bridge there may be no bridge and no time to build one. To make sure that the white nations shall be ready to act as a unit before fatal injury is inflicted on one of them, they must be cured of their mutual suspicion and jealousy; that is to say, the traditions of centuries must be blotted out of their minds, a task which will require time. A glance at recent developments suffices to prove that the movement toward union is as yet a seedling, the factors of discord in full bloom. Most of the European nations are largely increasing their armies, not for common defense against Asia but against one another, and they do not hesitate to court the aid of the dusky races against their own white kindred. To a large extent the European press ridicules the idea of a yellow peril or treats it as a matter for the remote future. Eighteen hundred years ago Tacitus, the Roman historian, speaking of the Britons, expressed his astonishment at this strange perversity of human nature which leads nations to continue their quarrels, even when the common enemy is at the door:

Nec aliud adversus validissimas gentes pro nobis utilius quam quod in commune non consuluntur. Rarus duabus tribusve civitatibus ad propulsandum commune periculum conventus; ita, dum singuli pugnant, universi vincuntur.

(In our contests with the most valiant nations nothing is more useful to us than the fact that they do not act together. Only in rare cases do two or three nations combine to ward off the common danger; and thus, as they fight each by itself, they are conquered one by one.)

What the Roman writer said of the Britons a Chinese writer may, by and by, say of Europeans.

WE MUST ACT AT ONCE.

In a word, we can not afford to leave the unifying movement to itself; if we can do anything to hasten it, a wise regard for our own safety will compel us to make the effort without delay. This is the most important matter; compared to it everything else is unimportant.

What are the obstacles that block the path to the union of Britain, France, and Germany? They are certain burning questions known to everybody. No advance toward union can be made in the near future unless these questions are settled. If I were Mars, the god of war, and were panting to see the bloodiest war that has ever yet been fought, do you know what I would do? I would organize a war society and make it adopt the very program that seems to be in favor with most peace societies—to leave the burning questions to "the healing virtue of time." Keep up that program till Asia, united and fully armed, asserts her long-claimed right to colonize—and no human being was ever born that would not assert the right to better his condition when he had the power—and your paper treaties of arbitration will be blown away in an instant by a world-wide cyclone of war, compared to which all past wars would be games of baseball. To delay the settlement of the burning questions another day is to hazard the timely union, the supremacy, the very existence, of the white race.

The only way to settle these questions is by compromise, by mutual concessions. These mutual concessions have already been widely debated and have been approved by the best thinkers in the three countries. Not one argument has ever been advanced against them that was not splintered at once by a stronger argument in their favor. The only drag that delays these concessions is the same drag that delayed the union of Germany till 1870—the inertia of accomplished facts. "Habit is an iron shirt," says a German proverb. That is a curse when the habit is a bad one; it is a blessing when the habit is a good one. Make Britain, France, and Germany doubt their iron shirt of disunion and the new shirt of union will quickly acquire the iron hardness of a habit.

How can we help the European advocates of union to batter down the inertia and move our three parent nations to adopt the mutual concessions which represent the portal to the paradise of perpetual peace? We can not well send missionaries to Europe to preach the gospel of compromise. If we did so, every loose tongue in Europe would be delighted with the opportunity of telling us to mind our own business. Happily there is no need of saying a word about it. We have two means of urging these mutual concessions without specifying them.

One of these two means has been described by Representative ALBERT JOHNSON. He advocates a Pan-Aryan association to work for the union of the white race. Such an association, he says, would soon have branches in Europe, whose work would naturally consist in pleading with their fellow citizens in behalf of the well-known mutual concessions. That is a capital idea, and it seems to me that every white man in the South and on the Pacific coast, every member of a trade-union, every advocate of peace, every American patriot ought to join Mr. JOHNSON'S Pan-Aryan association.

But we can do something still better. We can send to Europe an invisible missionary, a ubiquitous, intangible, unsilenceable, uninterruptable preacher, in whose presence the tongue of contradiction will be dumb, the most ranting jingo will bite his lip in speechless rage. An ounce of example is worth a ton of words. We have at this moment a unique, incomparable, God-sent opportunity to inculcate the policy of mutual concessions, the policy of compromise, by the most persuasive, the most inoffensive of all methods—that of example. To our neighbor, Canada, we can make a model concession which would electrify the world, take the heart of Europe by storm, sweep away the inertia of a hundred wrongly accomplished facts, and continue for centuries tearing iron shirts of pernicious habit into shreds.

II. THE INSTRUMENT WHICH WILL CONSTRUCT THE INTERNATIONAL EXECUTIVE POWER.

THE MODEL CONCESSION.

You remember the ill feeling caused in Canada 10 years ago by the controversy over the Alaska boundary. Perhaps you have never fully considered what that question means to Canada.

If you will look at a map showing Alaska in its relation to Canada, you will notice that Alaska consists of two parts, the main body and the panhandle, the latter comprising the islands of the Alexander Archipelago and a strip of coast on the mainland running southeastward as far as the parallel of 54° 40', a mere fringe, 536 miles long, 8 to 35 miles wide, shutting off Yukon territory, the northern half of British Columbia, and the entire Mackenzie Basin from free access to the Pacific. How large, do you think, is the inhabitable Canadian country thus deprived of its natural seaboard? It measures some 600,000 square miles, three times as much as Germany, ten times as much as England and Wales together. It has the same climate as Europe in the same latitude. In Europe, north of the parallel of 54° 40', on an area corresponding to the country behind this panhandle, you find a slice of Ireland, a slice of England, all Scotland, all Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, all Finland, a slice of Germany, and the richest part of Russia; great cities like St. Petersburg, with 1,700,000 inhabitants; Glasgow, with 900,000; Copenhagen, with 500,000. An equal area in Europe in the same latitude contains 25,000,000 inhabitants.

This innocently imprisoned Canadian country has immense resources in timber, agricultural, and mineral lands. The wealth of all countries is mainly concentrated in their ports—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore—but it is derived from the commerce of the country behind them. The wealth of this Canadian country will necessarily be concentrated in its ports—on American territory. The entire Pacific slope of this country is drenched with rain and possesses tremendous water power. The factories to be driven by that power will necessarily be on tidewater in American territory, but the reservoirs furnishing the power will be on Canadian ground. The 25,000,000 captive Canadians who will eventually live behind this panhandle will constantly be forced to contribute to the enrichment of half a dozen American cities, while these cities will not contribute a cent toward Canadian taxes. What a constant and growing source of vexation and irritation!

Reverse the situation and see how we should like it. Imagine that our Northeastern States were similarly incarcerated, cut off from the Atlantic by a Canadian panhandle 20 miles wide, 536 miles long, running from eastern Maine down nearly to Philadelphia; that all the great cities on that seaboard—Boston, Providence, Newport, New York, Jersey City—were Canadian cities, deriving their wealth from the American country behind them, yet contributing not a cent toward American taxes; that not a pound of freight could be sent from Pittsburg or Buffalo to New York or Boston for export except in bond. We should long ago have found the situation unendurable.

We should in that case have been greatly vexed if the Canadians had waited in stolid silence till the situation did become unendurable for us, till we were forced to complain. Now, we profess to be a Christian Nation, and as such to be guided by the golden rule, in which, according to the Founder's express declaration, the very essence of Christianity is summed up, and which, for that matter, is also the fundamental law in the gentleman's code: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Shall we wait until the situation becomes unendurable to the Canadians? Shall we force them to complain? If we do, we can no longer claim the golden rule as part of our creed without making it a badge of hypocrisy.

The only gentlemanly course, the only manly course, open to us is to say to the Canadians: "We will let you have this panhandle. What will you give us for it?"

"DO IT NOW."

That model concession ought not to be delayed a moment. If we will have the alertness to make it now of our own free choice, its beneficent effects will be at a maximum. The heart of Canada will be grappled to us as with hooks of steel; a noble, generous national deed, more glorious than all our victories, will be inscribed in our annals, proving at last that we are worthy of the exceptional favors we have received; our example will be most effective in recommending the policy of mutual concessions to our parent nations; next year's centennial peace celebration and the Panama Exposition in 1915 will become the greatest feasts of peace and good will the world has ever seen, most likely marking the beginning of eternal peace, the reunion of the English-speaking peoples; all Canada will come down to get acquainted with the Nation that was courteous to her, not only in word but in deed. If we dawdle till the Canadians complain, the concession will no longer be a model concession; the memory of it will forever be soured by the reflection that we forced them to complain; the effect of our example will be almost nullified; next year's celebration will become a mere ceremony, with the uncouth, gruesome figure of the panhandle sitting at the festive board like Banquo's ghost, jangling all the pretty panegyrics of peace with the dreary, dismal drone: "Diarrhea of words, constipation of deeds." The page in our history which ought to have been resplendent with the scroll of a noble national deed performed of our own accord will become permanently ugly with the blot of a lost opportunity; our great-grandchildren 100 years hence, reading this page of our history, will exclaim in mortified stupefaction: "Were our ancestors hibernating like badgers and woodchucks, with blood thickened to the consistency of axle grease, that they let this opportunity slip?" In future negotiations for the world's peace you can imagine what a powerful lever we should have in our hands if we were able to point to this model concession as proof of our sincerity. If we procrastinate, we must not be surprised if we hear this comment: "You Americans claim to be the leaders in the peace movement; you are forever talking about international good will, yet when it comes to removing the causes of international ill will you are just as regardless of your neighbors' feelings, just as stubborn as any of us in maintaining a geographic absurdity, a geographic atrocity, a thorn in your neighbor's flesh, not because you derive any essential advantage from it, but simply because it is so nominated in the bond. "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?"

On many office desks is seen a card with this antisoporific: "Do it now." Let Uncle Sam put that card on his desk.

THE VERMIFORM APPENDIX.

So grotesque is the appearance of the panhandle on the map that anyone beholding it must exclaim in astonishment: "How did this absurd boundary ever come into existence?" That is a queer story, which throws a peculiar light on human nature. You are familiar with the character of the vermiform appendix, that pesky little pouch in the human intestine which at present performs no useful function whatever, but, on the contrary, represents a constant danger. At one time it had a useful purpose, being an essential part of the digestive apparatus. That function ceased millions of years ago, but the structure remains through the force of heredity, the inertia of an accomplished fact. If you examine human institutions you will find hundreds of vermiform appendices. In Europe they are largely responsible for the inflammation described under the name of "burning questions." America, too, has a rich variety of interesting vermiform appendices, mostly brought from Europe among the most treasured possessions of emigrants, but some developed in the New World. Among the latter, the Alaska panhandle is perhaps the most classic. At one time there was a reason for its existence. You remember that up to 1867 Alaska belonged to Russia. The traders of the Russian-American Co., coming across the northern Pacific and following the line of easiest communication, had planted their stations along the coast, while the Hudson Bay Co., coming from the east, had spread its network of posts over the interior. When the two companies came into collision the two Governments found it necessary to define their respective spheres, and this they naturally did in accordance with existing interests. The coast, with the Russian stations, was given to Russia; the interior, with the British stations, was given to Britain. The statesmen of that day evidently thought that they did their duty if they dealt with the situation as it then existed; if the situation changed, it was the duty of their successors to have sense enough to recognize the change and make a new arrangement. We have not yet had sense enough to do that. The vermiform appendix created for the benefit of the Russian-American Co. still remains, though the company has vanished.

Evidently Europeans are not the only ones that wear the iron shirt of habit. Every biped, present company not excepted, wears one or more of these metallic garments, some an inch thick, some half an inch, some thin as tomato cans. Those who have eyes to see, not mere lumps of vitreous humor, need only glance at the Alaska panhandle to become aware that during the last 46 years we have been wearing a well-riveted, double-breasted, corrugated, accordeon-plaited iron shirt.

Every American believes that his country is a republic; that we forswore royalty and all its works 137 years ago. If you have eyes to see, you will find not a few of the traditions of royalty still haunting this land of the free. The superstition that a nation must never alienate any part of its territory except under the compulsion of defeat is nothing else than an ancient iron shirt, a survival from the time when the land was the property of the king. A government of the people, by the people, and for the people, when confronted with the question whether a boundary ought to be changed or be left unchanged, would belie itself, stultify itself, punch its own face if it decided the question on any other ground than that of the hindrance or aid which the boundary offers to the well-being of the nation, especially the convenience or inconvenience of the population directly affected by the boundary. It is evident also that a nation dedicated to the proposition that all men are equal and that governments were instituted solely for the purpose of securing to men their inalienable rights would trample on its own principles if it assumed that it has nothing to do with the comfort or discomfort of a neighbor nation except in so far as it affects its own citizens. A gentleman is always ready to subject himself to considerable inconvenience, to make considerable sacrifices, in order to relieve some one of a nuisance. It would be a pedantic, brutal, barbarous doctrine, another survival from the days of despotism, to say that a nation, especially a republic, can not be a gentleman, even when it can abolish a nuisance without inconvenience to itself, nay, with decided gain. It is the statesman's duty to safeguard the citizens' right to be ladies and gentlemen, not only individually but collectively. This consideration, it seems to me, settles the question. To doubt whether the American people would make the effort to shake off the inertia of a wrongly accomplished fact when it is adequately brought to their notice, to doubt whether they would applaud the proposal to relieve our Canadian neighbors of a fast-growing nuisance, would be to offer a mortal insult to our people, for it would imply a doubt whether the majority of them are ladies and gentlemen.

OPERATE BEFORE THE INFLAMMATION SETS IN.

Hitherto the nuisance of the panhandle boundary has been endurable to the Canadians because the country behind it was almost uninhabited. But that situation will change in less than a year. Mr. JOHNSON'S resolution calls attention to the necessity of railway communication between the United States and Alaska for purposes of defense. He quotes the "Vancouver doctrine," a Canadian supplement to the Monroe doctrine, launched in the Vancouver News-Advertiser of April 12, to the effect that Canada can not tolerate the occupation of Alaska by a foreign power and would be compelled by self-interest, in case of necessity, to permit the transportation of United States troops across her territory. An express agreement with Canada for that purpose, though highly desirable, would not be absolutely necessary, since the mere existence of railway communication with Alaska would suffice; and hence it might have been deemed likely that Canadian statesmen would be content to let the facts speak for themselves.

All the more gratifying was the announcement two months ago that the "Vancouver doctrine" had been publicly proclaimed by no less an authority than Sir Richard McBride, prime minister of British Columbia, who expressed the opinion that Canada would not hesitate to grant us the privilege of military transportation by treaty. That is a tremendously important concession on the part of Canada, amounting virtually to a Canadian-American alliance for the defense of Alaska, and this gentlemanly frankness calls for an equally gentlemanly concession in return.

Under these circumstances it can hardly be doubted that the building of that strategic railway, with half a dozen branches to Alaskan ports, will begin next year, and as it can be carried on from five or six points simultaneously it could, if desired, be finished in two years. To cap the climax, the government of Alberta has announced its intention to proceed with the immediate construction of a railway from Edmonton to Fort McMurray, which will place the Canadian railway system in intimate connection with the 2,100 miles of navigable waters of the Mackenzie River system. Already there is talk of another transcontinental railway north of the Grand Trunk. In a word, the entire country behind the Alaska panhandle will in two years become accessible for settlers. Huge investments will be made, calling for a vast supply of material, which will mean a bustling, rushing traffic. In five years there will be 300,000 people in that country.

Then the panhandle situation will become acute. Whoever has had experience in sending goods over a frontier in bond knows what a nuisance it is when conducted on a large scale. The settlers behind the panhandle would have to be angelically meek if they kept their temper when on reaching their western boundary, almost everywhere in tantalizing sight of the sea, they found that they could not get to tidewater except through a barbed-wire fence of customhouses, strung along a line drawn at random on the map in 1825 at St. Petersburg by two men who know nothing about Alaska and cared less. A period of constant friction and growing ill humor will follow, till the inertia is overcome and we shall have to settle the matter exactly as we ought to settle it now—by sale or exchange, or both. The only difference will be that instead of proving how prompt, how reasonable, how gentlemanly we are, we shall prove how sluggish we are, how regardless of other people's feelings. The deed which might have shone as the brightest jewel on our Nation's brow, had we taken the initiative, will, if done in response to our neighbor's complaint, simply become a label inscribed "Pachyderm."

Any surgeon will tell you that the proper time to operate on the vermiform appendix is not when the inflammation is at its highest, but when it is at its lowest. The proper time to operate on the Alaska appendix is now, when the inflammation of 1903 has fairly subsided and before the new inflammation which is setting in has made much progress.

CHANCE FOR A GOOD BARGAIN.

The proposition that the panhandle be surrendered gratuitously need not be discussed, for humanity has not yet reached that point of enlightenment or generosity. It would be premature to say what the equivalent should be, but one or two suggestions may be appropriate.

If there is any little British colony that we covet and that is of no great use to Britain, it might be included in the bargain and perhaps prove far more useful to us than the Alaska panhandle. British Honduras might be particularly apt to illustrate "the giving that is gaining." By offering it to the Mexicans, together with a sum of money (which might help to answer the question of the looming indemnities), we could probably get in exchange Lower California and enough of the Sonora Desert to give Arizona the much-desired port on the Gulf of California. With the water of Colorado River that desert could be converted into a miniature Egypt, capable of supporting a million inhabitants. It is rumored, in fact, that a company is planning to convert it into a vast cotton field, to be worked by Asiatic labor, for which the laws of Mexico would offer every facility. We might as well make up our minds now whether the water of our river is to enable an Asiatic colony of a million to be planted on our border. With Lower California we should acquire Magdalena Bay, a first-rate naval base, and thus put an end to the periodical scare over its impending occupation by another power.

The privilege of transporting troops over the proposed strategic railway is in itself an item that ought to figure largely in the estimate of equivalence.

It might be well to stipulate that free trade shall continue for, say, 20 years between the panhandle and the United States. In this way Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco would reap undiminished profit, in fact, quadrupled profit, from the enormous expansion of the trade of the panhandle and its hinterland, due to the building of the railways.

The strategic railway and its branches to the panhandle, vastly increasing the value of adjoining property, would mean a fortune to every property holder in the panhandle, whose ports, unhampered by the present barbed-wire fence of custom-houses a few miles inland, would in a few years develop into important cities—embryonic Glasgows and Dundees. If the purchase price included a sum of money, it might be stipulated that a part of that sum is to be devoted to improvements in the panhandle, with resulting additional prosperity to soothe the lacerated patriotism of its inhabitants, many of whom are probably not American citizens at all. In point of fact, half a million Americans have voluntarily gone to Canada and surrendered their nationality, apparently without any feeling of laceration. For that matter, the transfer need not involve any surrender of citizenship. The owners of the salmon canneries, it has been suggested, would probably find the laws of British Columbia less irksome than ours.

SUMMARY.

In summarizing the argument it may be well to glance at its fundamental principles.

All the peace that ever existed within any nation is compulsory; it would not last five minutes were it not for the presence of the executive power with its well-filled store of powder and ball. It is inconceivable how universal peace could exist without a similar executive power strong enough to beat down all opposition and compelled by self-interest to maintain peace just as Britain is compelled to do among the native States of India.

THE ÉLITE MUST CONTROL.

Now, peace, after all, is not the ultimate end, but merely a means to the ultimate end, which is the increase of human happiness. This does not mean that the majority must always rule; it requires that the élite, the most advanced types of humanity, should have the best chance to spread or at any rate hold their own. Which are the most advanced types? There is no use in dogmatizing or fanaticism one way or the other, in denying the merits of other races or cloaking the faults of our own. The question of the value of various races is a knotty scientific problem for the complete solution of which the data are as yet insufficient. Let us frankly admit that some races have not as yet had adequate opportunities. Let us grant that the mere plea of self-defense or the tie of blood counts for nothing; that if another race were found by trial to be more highly endowed with the qualities that make for the increase of happiness our own race should cheerfully resign the leadership. But while awaiting the reasoned, passionless verdict of science on these points, nothing could be more preposterous than to assume in advance that the verdict will be unfavorable to us and accordingly to let events take a course which must surely deprive our race of the leadership and place it at the mercy of the dusky majority. The evidence in favor of the superiority of our race is even now fairly overwhelming, and it is highly improbable that new researches will materially alter the balance of argument. Civilization in the future as in the past will mainly depend on its pioneers, and hence it is best for human life as a whole that the pioneer race should have the best chance to spread. We know exactly how we are going to treat the other races so long as we remain in control; we shall continue more and more to—

Fill up the mouth of famine
And bid the sickness cease.

We have not the slightest means of guessing how the other races will treat us if we place ourselves at their mercy.

THE ÉLITE TRAINING ITS ANTAGONISTS.

Universal arbitration can not insure the predominance of the highest types, for arbitration resolves itself in the long run into a counting of heads, and for every white face in the world there are two dusky faces. That was not a serious matter so long as white men reserved to themselves the well-earned power arising from their own inventive genius, so long as they were the only ones possessing magazine rifles and cannon. Of late, however, unscrupulous white men, caring for nothing but sordid gain, have, through the disunion of the white race, been allowed to sell the latest improved weapons to the other races by the million and have taught them to manufacture these weapons; white officers, supposed to represent the very cream of honor and patriotism, have for love of money committed the unspeakable treason of instructing the dusky races in military science. If our race thus continues to lame itself in the struggle for existence by throwing away the advantage conferred by its very highest qualities, the time will soon come when the dusky races, outnumbering us as two to one, and using all their advantages to the utmost, will be the masters, we the servants. Unrestricted competition of cheap labor would little by little crowd the white race out of existence by taking away the means of life from the white laboring class, the fertile soil from which all the flowers of our civilization have sprung. Disarmament, the substitution of universal arbitration in place of armed defense, would simply hasten the coming of the day when we shall have to doff the crown of supremacy and don the cap of subordination and prepare to quit the house which we have swept and garnished. Our very demigods of intellect, whose genius subdued the earth and made every corner of it accessible, would become the authors of our ruin if the science created by them and rightly placed at the disposal of all humanity without stint or discrimination, enabled the other races, by their reckless fecundity and callousness, to oust us from the competition for those means of existence which nature necessarily awards to the lowest bidder.

Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu
That on the field his targe he threw.

There is only one way to prevent this. Fortunately, the surrender has not yet proceeded far; Roderick Dhu still holds the targe. For the present we white men are as yet incomparably superior in power to all the other races, and we can easily remain so if we will only stop quarreling among ourselves. United we stand; divided we fall. If we do not hang together, we shall hang separately. The most exquisitely silly geese are those boasters who perpetually prate about Aryan superiority, and as perpetually speak of an Aryan sister nation as "the hereditary enemy," thus insisting to the best of their myopic ability that the Aryan house shall remain divided against itself and capitulate to a mass of cheap muscle.

When the fate of the entire white race is at stake our people would have to be mollusks, not red-blooded human beings, if they hesitated to make the trifling nominal sacrifice which will assure their own perpetual supremacy.

A TERRIBLE WARNING.

The history of Greece is the most frightful object lesson to prove that the most brilliant mental superiority in other respects will not compensate for the folly of disunion. More than 2,200 years ago Aristotle wrote:

The Greek people, being both brave and intelligent, have retained their freedom and enjoy the best administration, and could rule the world if they had the good luck of becoming united under one government.

Luck! That word tells what the philosopher thought of contemporary human nature. Well he knew that his countrymen, with all their superb gifts, would never have sense enough, nobility enough, to grasp the boon of union of their own accord, but would have to wait for luck to thrust it on them. And the luck never came. Little did the philosopher dream that his glorious race, which, according to Galton, had reached a higher average of intellectual development than has ever been attained by any other community and whose achievements in several lines of activity are even now the unsurpassed models, would, through their cursed disunion, become helpless chattels, trampled under foot by every barbarian, so crushed by perpetual outrage that for many centuries they dared not defend themselves against the most atrocious treatment. "Völker Europas, wahret eure höchsten Güter!" Do not wait for luck! "Do it now!"

THE FOUR GUARDIANS OF CIVILIZATION.

Thus, in order to have the best assurance that the international executive power shall always be on the side of justice, civilization, and the increase of happiness, it must be composed not only of the strongest but also of the justest, most humane, most advanced nations. To state this condition is to name the four nations which can best fulfill it—Britain, France, Germany, and the United States. Their appointment as world policemen would not mean disarmament, but it would mean the minimum of armament. So long as there are a dozen big sticks in the world they are bound to grow bigger and bigger; when there is only one big stick it will quickly grow smaller.

Certain unsettled questions prevent the three prospective European partners in this league of peace from annexing one another, to the immense advantage of each. These questions can only be settled by mutual concessions. The best intellects in the three countries have declared themselves in favor of these concessions; the sole obstacle, the inertia of accomplished facts, has begun to crack. All that is needed is the first move—a difficult matter for the three nations in their habitual attitude of mutual defiance. Let the fourth partner, their joint offspring and impartial and unsuspected friend, give a little push, and the inertia of wrongly accomplished facts, already cracking, will crumble; the white race will become united, its supremacy forever assured.

THE LAST STRAW.

How shall we give this little push? Not by exhortation, but by example; not by advising our brother to draw the mote from his eye, but by picking the beam out of our own eye; by setting before the eyes of the civilized nations a model concession, which will inculcate the policy of mutual concessions far more eloquently, far more irresistibly, than a thousand meetings, a thousand banquets, a thousand speeches, a thousand books. It will at once become our ambassador to Europe, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Disunited States of Europe—our ubiquitous, sleepless, thousand-tongued apostle, shouting to our parent nations day and night: "Compromise! Compromise! Compromise! See how cleverly the Americans are doing it! Be reasonable, gentlemanly, to one another, as the Americans are to the Canadians!"

In brief, our country has at this moment such an opportunity as never came to another nation, the opportunity to bestow permanent peace on humanity, and thus to assure to herself the most honored place among the nations for all time to come. This is the most important matter; compared to it everything else is unimportant. Gentlemen, you are patriots; you are the guardians of your country's honor. I feel confident that you will be equal to the opportunity.

Intervention for the Protection of Life and Property in Mexico.

OF

HON. WM. H. MURRAY,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 7, 1913.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, history discloses the fact that every political party long out of power, seeking to make issues directly concerning the people, is prone to forget our world relations. The Democratic Party, though, prior to the Civil War was the aggressive party of all parties then extant in handling international questions, particularly those which had in mind the future perpetuity of the Republic, such as the announcement of the Monroe doctrine and the protection of life and property on the high seas and in foreign lands; but having been long out of power, seems not to be an exception to this general rule.

PARTY PLATFORM HISTORY.

This rule may be noted from the platform declarations of the various American political parties. I quote from my speech on September 4 last on this floor:

"The doctrine of protecting American citizens' life and property in all the world is not a new doctrine. It is a doctrine that has gone hand in hand with every administration of this Republic, and the men who have adhered most closely to it have enjoyed the greatest personal popularity. Among them were Monroe, Jackson, Lincoln, Grant, and Roosevelt, who steadfastly adhered to the doctrine of protecting American citizens everywhere.

"Reference to the political conventions will show that at no time has a party gone into power that did not have a stronger platform than its opponent. The strongest platform in line with those ideals is that laid down in the Baltimore platform.

"It is interesting to observe the platform declarations made since the organization of the Government touching American foreign policies—the Monroe doctrine and the protection of American citizens abroad as well as at home. I repeat that prior to the Civil War no political party, except the Democratic Party, announced a foreign policy, save and except the platform upon which Henry Clay ran for President in 1832. This declaration was but a meager one, and in these words:

"We consider the life, liberty, property, and citizenship of every inhabitant of every State entitled to national protection.

"And even this is susceptible of a double construction and could be construed as meaning such national protection at home without such protection abroad.

"Prior to the Civil War the Democratic Party, both by administration and treaty, as well as by platform declaration, was bold and vigorous in its adherence to an international policy. In its platform of 1840, with Martin Van Buren as its candidate for President, it announced:

"That every citizen and every section of country has a right to demand and insist upon an equality of rights and privileges, and to compel ample protection of person and property from domestic violence or foreign aggression.

"This same section was specifically reaffirmed in 1844, with the adoption of an additional provision for American expansion. These planks were repeated in 1848, in 1852, and again in 1856. In addition to this declaration in 1856 the Democratic Party announced a more comprehensive international plank by affirming the Monroe doctrine, commerce, and protection of American citizens abroad. In the platform it declares:

"Resolved, That the administration of Franklin Pierce has been true to the great interests of the country. * * * It has signally improved our treaty relations, extended the field of commercial enterprise, and vindicated the rights of American citizens abroad.

"Again, in section 2, it says:

"Resolved, That our geographical and political position with reference to the other States of this continent, no less than the interest of our commerce and the development of our growing power, requires that we should hold as sacred the principles involved in the Monroe doctrine. Their bearing and import admit of no misconstruction; they should be applied with unbending rigidity.

"And again, section 5:

"Resolved, That the Democratic Party will expect of the next administration that every proper effort be made to insure our ascendance in the Gulf of Mexico, and to maintain a permanent protection to the great outlets through and emptied into its waters the products raised out of the soil and the commodities created by the industry of the people of our western valleys and the Union at large.

"In 1860 we find in the platform upon which Breckinridge was nominated a broader policy governing American territory, together with the following declaration:

"The Democratic Party of the United States recognizes it as the imperative duty of this Government to protect the naturalized citizen in all of his rights, whether at home or in foreign lands, to the same extent as its native-born citizens.

"Then came the Republican convention of 1860, which nominated the immortal Abraham Lincoln, and which was the first party platform in opposition to the Democratic Party that announced, in unmistakable language, its policy to protect American citizens at home and abroad. It used this language:

"The Republican Party is opposed to any change in our naturalization laws * * * and is in favor of giving a safe and efficient protection to the rights of all classes of citizens, whether native or natural born, at home and abroad.

"In the same year the Constitutional Union Party, which nominated for President John Bell, of Tennessee, announced the same doctrine in these words:

"We hereby oblige ourselves to maintain, protect, and defend, separately and unitedly, that great principle of public liberty and national safety, against all enemies, at home and abroad.

"After this the Democratic Party, until the nomination of Tilden and Cleveland, had but meager expressions touching the Monroe doctrine and the policy of protecting American citizens abroad, and the obligations of the Government having fallen upon the Republican Party, they with great energy asserted the same doctrines adhered to for the first 60 years of the Republic under Democratic rule. In the midst of a great civil war, when it taxed its resources to maintain itself, in the face of the Mason and Slidell controversy with Great Britain and the fear that Great Britain would recognize the Southern States as an independent government, with the election of a President in 1864, nominated Abraham Lincoln again for the Presidency, and, following the example of the President in contesting the claims of the holy alliances of Europe, seeking by subterfuge to place Maximilian on the throne of Mexico, the Republican Party fearlessly and boldly, in section 11 of their platform, announced this doctrine:

"Resolved, That we approve the position taken by the Government that the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any European power to overthrow by force or to supplant by fraud the institutions of any republican government on the Western Continent, and that they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the peace and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such power to obtain new footholds for monarchial governments, sustained by foreign military force, in near proximity to the United States.

"Students of history will recall that from the beginning of this Government there had been an issue between us and European Governments, particularly with Great Britain, upon the question of the right to impressment of American seamen; that this was the first cause of the War of 1812; and that although this war terminated satisfactory to the United States, it left this question unsettled—the question of 'expatriation,' the British doctrine that 'Once a citizen, always a citizen'—and it was not settled until Grant was made President of the United States, and its settlement was largely due to the firing on a foreign war vessel by the United States Navy and the prevention of the taking away of an American citizen who had become naturalized from one of the European monarchies.

"In the Republican platform of 1868, which nominated Gen. U. S. Grant for the Presidency, we find this broad principle enunciated:

"The doctrine of Great Britain and other European powers, that because a man is once a subject he is always so, must be resisted at every hazard by the United States as a relic of feudal times not authorized by the laws of nations and at war with our national honor and independence. Naturalized citizens are entitled to protection in all their rights of citizenship as though they were native born; and no citizen of the United States—native or naturalized—must be liable to arrest and imprisonment by any foreign power for acts done or words spoken in this country; and, if so arrested and imprisoned, it is the duty of the Government to interfere in his behalf.

"We find in the platform of 1872, when Grant was nominated for the second time for the Presidency, a repetition of this doctrine:

"The doctrine of Great Britain and other European powers concerning allegiance—'Once a subject always a subject'—having at last, through the efforts of the Republican Party, been abandoned, and the American idea of the individual's right to transfer allegiance having been accepted by European nations, it is the duty of our Government to guard with jealous care the rights of adopted citizens against the assumption of unauthorized claims by their former Governments.

"In the settlement of this doctrine of the right of 'expatriation'—the right to change citizenship—finally won by the United States Government, it was due to the vigorous, broad, and comprehensive foreign policy and administration of President Grant. This second Grant platform enunciated the principles of Jefferson in his first inaugural address. In section 4 it reads as follows:

"The National Government should seek to maintain honorable peace with all nations, protecting its citizens everywhere and sympathizing with all people who strive for greater liberty.

"After the administration of Grant the foreign policy enunciated by the Republican Party was weak until the nomination of William McKinley in 1896. In this platform it enunciated the principles of reciprocity, trade with foreign nations, merchant marine, foreign relations with the Western Hemisphere, and sympathy with the victims of the Armenian massacres, and a reassertion of the Monroe doctrine. After this the policy of the administration of the Republican Party departed from the old principles of Jefferson—'Peace and commerce with all nations and entangling alliances with none'; 'Encouragement of republican governments and their protection from the monarchies of the Old World'—and substituted therefor the doctrine of imperialism.

"It may be noted in all the platform-making history of this Republic that there was never an instance of an election of a candidate for President upon any ticket where his foreign policy, as expressed in his platform, was less comprehensive than his opponent upon the Monroe doctrine and the protection of American citizens in foreign lands.

"Returning to the Democratic doctrine since the Civil War, we find in the canvass of 1868, with Horatio Seymour for the Presidency, enunciations of the old principles of the Democratic Party, but with less vigor than his opponent, Gen. Grant. Here is section 8 of that platform:

"Equal rights and protection for naturalized and native-born citizens at home and abroad; the assertion of American nationality which shall command the respect of foreign powers and furnish an example and encouragement to people struggling for national integrity, constitutional liberty, and individual rights, and the maintenance of the rights of naturalized citizens against the absolute doctrine of immutable allegiance, and the claims of foreign powers to punish them for alleged crime committed beyond their jurisdiction.

"The next broad and comprehensive declaration of the old ante bellum Democratic doctrine was found in the platform of 1884, upon which Grover Cleveland was elected to the Presidency:

"We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the 15 sister Republics of North, Central, and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

* * * * * * *

"The Democratic Party insists that it is the duty of the Government to protect with equal fidelity and vigilance the rights of its citizens, native and naturalized, at home and abroad, and to the end that this protection may be assured, United States papers of naturalization, issued by courts of competent jurisdiction, must be respected by the executive and legislative departments of our own Government and by all foreign powers. It is an imperative duty of this Government to efficiently protect all the rights of person and property of every American citizen in foreign lands, and demand and enforce full reparation for any invasion thereof. An American citizen is only responsible to his own Government for any act done in his own country and under her flag, and can only be tried therefor on her own soil and according to her laws; and no power exists in this Government to expatriate an American citizen to be tried in any foreign land for any such act.

"This country has never had a well defined and executed foreign policy, save under Democratic administration. That policy has ever been in regard to foreign nations, so long as they do not act detrimental to the interests of the country or hurtful to our citizens, to let them alone; that as a result of this policy we recall the acquisition of Louisiana, Florida, California, and of the adjacent Mexican territory, by purchase alone, and contrast these grand acquisitions of Democratic statesmanship with the purchase of Alaska, the sole fruit of a Republican administration of nearly a quarter of a century.

"Under a long period of Democratic rule and policy our merchant marine was fast overtaking and on the point of outstripping that of Great Britain. Under 20 years of Republican rule and policy our commerce has been left to British bottoms, and the American flag has almost been swept off the high seas. Instead of the Republican Party's British policy we demand for the people of the United States an American policy.

"Another instance where the broader international policy was successful is found in the defeat of Cleveland by Harrison, wherein they expressed themselves on the protection of our fisheries and the Monroe doctrine. Upon the Monroe doctrine the platform says:

"The conduct of foreign affairs by the present administration has been distinguished by its inefficiency and its cowardice. Having withdrawn from the Senate all pending treaties effected by Republican administrations for the removal of foreign burdens and restrictions upon our commerce and for its extension into better markets, it has neither effected nor proposed any others in their stead.

"Professing adherence to the Monroe doctrine, it has seen with idle complacency the extension of foreign influence in Central America and of foreign trade everywhere among our neighbors. It has refused to charter, sanction, or encourage any American organization for constructing the Nicaraguan canal, a work of vital importance to the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine and of our national influence in Central and South America and necessary for the development of trade with our Pacific territory, with South America, and with the islands and farther coasts of the Pacific Ocean.

"In the race for the Presidency of 1892 the Democratic platform, upon which Cleveland was elected for the second time, announced a foreign policy, as follows:

"The Democratic Party is the only party that has ever given the country a foreign policy, consistent and vigorous, compelling respect abroad and inspiring confidence at home. While avoiding entangling alliances, it has aimed to cultivate friendly relations with other nations, and especially with our neighbors on the American Continent, whose destiny is closely linked with our own, and we view with alarm the tendency to a policy of irritation and bluster, which is liable at any time to confront us with the alternative of humiliation or war. We favor the maintenance of a navy strong enough for all purposes of national defense and to properly maintain the honor and dignity of the country abroad.

"In addition to this comprehensive policy this platform gave expression to the question of 'reciprocity,' 'sympathy for the oppressed in foreign lands,' 'immigration,' 'waterways,' and 'Nicaraguan canal.'

"In the platform of 1896, upon which W. J. Bryan was first nominated for the Presidency, we find the following declaration:

"The Monroe doctrine, as originally declared and as interpreted by succeeding Presidents, is a permanent part of the foreign policy of the United States and must at all times be maintained.

"We extend our sympathy to the people of Cuba in their heroic struggle for liberty and independence.

"Again, in the platform of 1900 the Democratic Party dealt with the question of 'Cuba,' 'the Philippines,' 'the Monroe doctrine,' 'militarism,' the 'Nicaraguan Canal,' and the 'Hay' treaty, but made the mistake to adopt negative policies without affirming a constructive policy upon these several questions, and hence it may be observed that the American people, through their party platforms and administrations, have invariably stood for a constructive, progressive international policy rather than a negative one; that on the whole they prefer peace and commerce with all nations and entangling alliances with none; the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine and the protection of American citizens in foreign lands; sympathy for the oppressed and encouragement to republican institutions; that on the whole they have opposed imperialism or force for the purpose of acquisition of territory, while standing equally strong for the American system of government and the rights of American commerce in foreign seas and the rights of American citizens in foreign lands, not only by party platform declarations, but by more than 40 instances of intervention by force during the past hundred years of administration.

"In the campaign of 1912 the marked difference between the Democratic, the Republican, and the Progressive platforms is noted. The Democratic Party took a bold stand in favor of the 'Monroe doctrine,' the 'efficiency of an army and navy,' the 'independence of the Philippines,' the 'protection of Americans in foreign lands,' and particularly the Jews in Russia, and a demand for a new Russian treaty guaranteeing these rights, and the 'Panama Canal,' which constitutes the broadest constructive affirmative declaration in many years touching an international policy, crowning these policies with the following bold and aggressive stand touching the rights of American citizens wherever resident or sojourning:

"We commend the patriotism of the Democratic Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives which compelled the termination of the Russian treaty of 1832, and we pledge ourselves anew to preserve the sacred rights of American citizenship at home and abroad. No treaty should receive the sanction of our Government which does not recognize that equality of all our citizens, irrespective of race or creed, and which does not expressly guarantee the fundamental right of expatriation.

"The constitutional rights of American citizens should protect them on our borders and go with them throughout the world, and every American citizen residing or having property in any foreign country is entitled to and must be given the full protection of the United States Government both for himself and his property.

"From all these platform declarations it will be observed that all parties that had for their support any great body of the American people have proclaimed adherence to the Monroe doctrine and 'the protection of American citizens at home or abroad.'"

GOVERNMENT BOTH SIMPLE AND COMPLEX.

Government, simple as it is, seems to be complicated, in this: That while we take heed of one branch of the public service we overlook another. We have personal relations to consider—that is, the relation between individual and individual, between family and family, which we call local administration or, more properly, county government. In addition, we have our State policies and administration, those pertaining to State government. And then we have our interstate relations, which concern us as an integral part of the Nation. In addition thereto, we have our international, or world relations. Wholesome government consists in a proper understanding and in a sound administration of law and of policy as it governs all these relations. We must look after our local or county relations, our State and National relations, but when we do this in the interest of economy and in the exercise of wholesome police power, should we overlook our international relations? Policies of other nations, lying in the secret minds of monarchs and cabinets, might undermine our world commerce, throw us in competition, not with other nations, but back upon ourselves, and what is greater, might undermine our republican institutions and at the end of a generation, by such policies on part of such foreign kings and cabinets, dismember our Republic or take from us a portion of our territory. At least such has been the experience of all history. Hence, wise government and a wise party policy consists in a thorough understanding and a full exercise of all the functions of government—county, State, National, and international. Not to have such a wholesome government in our administration would, "as surely as night follows the day," lead to the weakening of the source of our national peace, which, invariably, is productive of war, and leave us uncertain of that strength so necessary to our national existence.

This strength is not made up so much by armies and navies, but in the exercise and maintenance of a strong world policy such as will look toward holding our markets, the preservation of our institutions and those nations in sympathy therewith, and, above all, our peace upon the high seas by promoting our merchant marine to carry to every port our flag and establish there a market for agriculture, which can prosper only as trade prospers and as markets are surely established.

EMBARGO FALLACY.

In this connection I desire to quote from another five-minute speech delivered during the consideration of the deficiency bill:

"Mr. Chairman, the House will doubtless understand the difficulty I have in discussing a subject not directly in connection with this bill and yet conform to the rule, so that I may not be taken off the floor by a point of order. This paragraph relates to the Revenue-Cutter Service, whose duties, I am informed by the committee, will be to see that the revenues are collected; incidentally, of course, it will have to do with contraband goods.

"Mr. MANN. Well, they do not have anything to do with the collection of the revenue. I said the gentleman did not know.

"Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will accept the gentleman's information on that point. Incidentally they would have to do with the embargo against certain goods. This Nation has never, except in two instances, entered upon a system of embargo. First, in 1807 Mr. Jefferson, with an idea that the country could exist without any military force, conceived the notion that by retaliation and by exclusion of commerce war could be prevented. It was first favored by the agricultural States, but they later demanded its repeal when they suffered for a market. Jefferson lived to regret it, and it is the only policy that he advocated that he ever had cause to regret.

"In after years he said, speaking of the Shay rebellion:

"God forbid we should ever be 20 years without such. * * * What signify a few lives lost in a century or two? The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure. (Jefferson's Work, vol. 2, p. 267.)

"Jefferson's own party repudiated the embargo doctrine. In 1809 Congress, fresh from the people, or at the behest of the people, repudiated that act of embargo. The President plead with Congress not to repeal it until the 1st of June, but in February they made the act take effect on the 1st of March. Now we have come to the proposition of an embargo upon a certain kind of goods that may be used in war, and that embargo is fixed under a resolution of Congress and declared by President Taft and still continues. If this is intended to continue I am opposed to it. The doctrine of neutrality in every nation, and especially of this, has been that a neutral power is not called upon to cause any of its citizens to sacrifice any of their rights to trade with the world.

"Mr. Jefferson, when Secretary of State, so stated to the British minister, and it was stated by every Secretary of State since when the question arose; and yet we say that because there is a war in Mexico or rebellion that the manufacture of firearms and of ammunition and of everything that may be used in war shall be prohibited from being shipped across the border, and so absurd is that doctrine and so unjust in its application that in El Paso a retail merchant stands indicted and under bond for selling cartridges to a Mexican in his retail business. The only limitation we can exact of a merchant is that if the goods should be sold and one of the belligerent parties gets possession of them he can not ask his Government for compensation for their destruction. I had hoped that since the experience of this country in the embargo act of 1807 to 1809 we would never engage in this policy again.

"Now, the President says he holds to Taft's order because he is opposed to Huerta. In that opposition I think he is wise, but inadvertently he is assisting Huerta, because the latter has the ports where they collect the Mexican revenue, and guns may be shipped through those ports to the Huerta government unless we close them.

"The patrol on the land border of Mexico by the United States Regulars cuts the insurgents off from getting arms, and thereby instead of making a balance between the two it creates a situation which aids Huerta, to the detriment of the insurgents. The only way to insure fair play is to follow the international law. Situated as we are, let American merchants sell their goods anywhere in the world under the international law, and give the contending Mexican bands equality. That would not aid Huerta but would put them both on the same basis. I cordially approve of the President in his opposition against Huerta; but I oppose such unjust restriction against American commerce, without which agriculture will suffer, as it did in the embargo act of 1807, which caused its repeal."

THE TRUE STATESMAN

The true statesman is he who looks into the future an hundred years and frames policies that will bring about wholesome measures of government. The true statesman arises above the present immediate effect and turns an eye toward the future, always formulating policies that will vouchsafe every wholesome relation of the citizen. It is because of this regard for the future weal of the Republic, for the safety of American institutions, the general welfare of American citizens, for the promotion of commerce, the handmaid of agriculture; for the perpetuity of national existence, together with the preservation of the white race, that I am thus persistent in contesting the views of others and in urging upon the present administration and the Democratic Party the necessity for the exercise of an active but constructive international policy.

NECESSITY FOR INTERNATIONAL POLICY.

History is replete with the policies of nations for the extension of domain under one monarch, to be dismembered by a weak and careless successor. Caesar built up the Roman Empire, to be followed by a lack of policy which dismembered and destroyed it. Charlemagne and Frederick the Great, each in different periods of time, built up extended national boundaries, to have them destroyed by the lack of a continuous policy on the part of their successors. England, whose flag encircles the earth, whose drumbeat is heard in every clime, whose trade is in every mart and port of the world, did not bring this about by accident, but by a concerted effort on part of successive and consecutive administrations having this policy in view. Instead of using corporations, or rather permitting their use, as we have done, to build up monopolies and oppress the public Great Britain has used these great corporations for the purpose of extending her boundaries and promoting her trade. Through the East India Co. she established her commerce with the Orient, and without difficulty secured an empire in India. Through the Hudson Bay Co., without war, she got an eternal grip upon Canada, a territory of greater extent than our Republic. Through Cecil Rhodes and his associates she secured South Africa. I recite these policies as an incident of our necessity of an international policy—not that of conquest, to be sure, but one that will sustain the Republic, the preservation of American institutions, and the integrity of the white race.

THE REPUBLIC AND WHITE MAN'S CIVILIZATION INVOLVED.

The problem with Mexico, with the probable resultant complications growing out of it, both with Japan in her colonization agreement and with European nations who desire to protect their own citizens, confronts us with the gravest problem before the present administration. Our action for the purpose of protecting life and property would be approved by European Governments and the world at large, and this intervention would enable us to cancel the secret colonization agreements between the usurpers of Mexico and the Japanese. Hence the right policy now might determine the future political map of the world; it may determine whether republican government shall endure upon this continent. It may determine whether Mexico is to become a white man's country or to be under the control and domination of Asiatic races. It may ultimately determine not only the perpetuity of our own Republic, but the civilization of the Aryan race. The pages of history are replete with the rise and fall not only of nations but of races. One hundred and twenty-five years ago the French outstripped the English; 200 years ago the Spanish nation was the most extensive of all Europe; but now both the English-speaking race and English domination surpass either France or Spain. Is history to repeat itself and at the end of another hundred years to witness the dawn of the twenty-first century with the world's domination by Japanese and Chinese, both in point of number and empire? The Mexican problem may answer this question, and I am unwilling to have it said of me that I was charged, although in but a minor way, as a Member of Congress, in dealing with these problems, that I shirked the responsibility or failed to give that warning which my own intelligence, study, and investigation suggested as right and proper, even though I might be out of line with the authorities of the Government or with my own party. I want now to warn that party to which I belong of the history of the past—that no party has ever succeeded that did not stand squarely upon the Monroe doctrine and the protection of American citizens both at home and abroad.

PERMANENT REMEDY FOR MEXICO.

The remedy in handling the Mexican problem must depend upon the conditions as they arise. What would have been proper in the beginning of the trouble has undergone changes, and what this Government, in my opinion, now should do is quite different from what it should have done on the 4th day of March. It then should have given the insurgents arms by lifting the Taft embargo. What ought to be done now is that this Government throw a cordon of soldiers on the border of Mexico and take possession of every revenue customhouse, throw the Navy into every custom port and take possession thereof, and cut both Huerta and the insurgent forces off from every cent of revenue. This can be done without loss of life, and by collecting the revenues for 30 days neither side will have ammunition with which to fight. Out of this revenue thus collected this Government could pay indemnity to foreign losses, and if the Mexican people can not or do not establish peace and order among themselves, I would then, when they are stripped of all revenue and fired their last round of ammunition, march the American Army into the capital, take possession of the Republic, and issue a military order canceling the Japanese and foreign land concessions. I would issue another military order breaking up the big estates in Mexico and order them sold in small tracts to any purchaser of the white race; open up the remaining public land to homestead by Mexican citizens only, giving relief to the poor of that country; establish universal public schools for the education of every child in Mexico; and if need be, I would hold this military occupation, with this policy in view, for a generation, or until the children of the 9,000,000 illiterates have grown up to manhood and womanhood, with education and ability to govern themselves. This policy would end forever revolution in Mexico and give to her citizens justice and permanent peace.

It is true that white colonization of Mexico and the purchase by our farmers of the big landed estates when broken up would possibly follow, and if we are compelled to remain there for a generation it will have been settled so thoroughly by the Aryan race that, like the settlement of Texas, they will want to follow the retreat of our flag back to the United States; and if they should voluntarily vote to do so, I would accept them, because it does not violate our own interests to own every foot of land from here to the Panama Canal. It is an extension upon our own continent and not a colonial imperialism, such as acquiring the Philippines.

The foregoing policy can be inaugurated practically without the loss of life—certainly without the loss of as many lives as have already been lost, and certainly with less cost. It would be more humane to our own citizens and to the poor of Mexico. It would result in the awakening of civilization of the 9,000,000 oppressed citizens of that pitiable Republic. The cost would be borne out of the Mexican revenues.

OUR STANDING ARMY AND MILITARY STRENGTH NECESSARY TO PACIFY MEXICO.

Statements are often made that it would require a quarter of a million soldiers to settle the difficulty in Mexico. This would be the scope if the Army should be permitted to frame the military policy which should govern in such intervention. The United States has a surplus of "captains" and other commanders among the Regular Army who desire promotion to give them better standing and salary. This can be brought about only by a larger Army, either standing or volunteer. Their desire would be the mobilization of an Army of gigantic proportion for this purpose; but let us see whether this is necessary. The following discloses the comparative size of the standing Army of the United States to-day with the Army in the War with Mexico in 1848:

Number of enlisted men in the War with Mexico in 1848.

[From the Adjutant General's report, dated Dec. 3, 1849.]

Regulars and Volunteers	101,110
Number of officers and men of the Regular Army at the commencement of the war	7,365
Total	108,475

Number of Regular Army to-day.

Regular enlisted men	84,810
Commissioned officers	4,744
Total	89,554

The above do not include the enlisted men and commissioned officers of the Philippine Scouts nor the enlisted men with the Hospital Corps. So it will readily be seen that the Regular Army of the United States is quite equal to all element of raw recruits constituting the Army in the War of 1848. Besides, at that time we had to fight Santa Anna, the "Napoleon of the West" and Mexico's greatest military chieftain, with Mexico at peace with herself and amply prosperous, while to-day Mexico, is divided, with a depleted treasury, ruined credit, not only nationally but the wealth of the individuals swept away by an internal strife and banditti raids of three years' duration. Hence, it may be safely said that the present standing Army of the United States is all that is needed to settle the disturbance in that country. If any volunteers are necessary, every man of them can be raised either in Oklahoma or Texas, and all the Government has to do is to give the men an opportunity to respond to the call for duty.

MONROE DOCTRINE AND DEMOCRATIC RECORD.

The Democratic Party, under Monroe, had an eye to this result when, in the very weakness of our national existence, he proclaimed the doctrine that America, by reason of our independent position, should not be subject to the colonization schemes of the European monarchies. The same doctrine was in the mind of Grover Cleveland when he said to Great Britain in the matter of the boundary dispute between her possessions in South America and the little Republic of Venezuela: "You shall arbitrate that boundary dispute." And although Great Britain sought to deny the Monroe doctrine as international law, recognized it as a policy, in this, that she agreed with Venezuela upon arbitration of the boundary dispute. The Monroe doctrine, since its enunciation by Monroe in 1823, as it should, has undergone modification to meet new international problems, and now we have reached the period when the direct danger of having America colonized by European monarchies has passed, but we have reached a more formidable danger by having it colonized by the Asiatic races of Japan and China.

DANGER OF CHINA AND JAPAN.

In China alone live one-fourth of the people of the world, and there are enough of them to overrun our entire North American Continent, driving to poverty and the poorhouse the American laboring men, and yet their absence from China would scarcely be felt. Just last year, realizing this Asiatic race menace, the Senate of the United States, by an overwhelming majority, passed the Lodge resolution enlarging the Monroe doctrine, by declaring that when any harbor on the American Continent is so situated that the occupation thereof for naval or military purposes might threaten the communication or safety of the United States, the United States could not see the possession of such harbor in the hands of another Government, not American, as to give such Government control for naval or military purposes. This resolution was precipitated solely because of a rumored attempt of a Japanese fishing company to secure certain privileges on Magdalena Bay. This resolution passed the Senate by a vote of 51 to 4, and its design was to protect the American Republic from becoming colonized by the Asiatic races, and in this connection I might add that it would be far better to let Asiatics come within our own Republic than to see Mexico and the Central American States become overrun, settled, and controlled by Japan and China. To the Wall Street Journal and other "Eastern influence," who ask Members of Congress to declare to the world that we have abandoned the Monroe doctrine as unnecessary, my reply is that we must preserve it to protect our own race, and the necessity therefor is far greater than it was in 1823. To colonize America by European monarchies would be to destroy our Republic, but would preserve white civilization. To colonize the American Continent with the Asiatic races would destroy our civilization as well as the Republic; would drive us back in competition upon ourselves and the American laborer to poverty and to the poorhouse.

War is an evil thing. It is to be abhorred. But there are worse things than war. To be dominated by an inferior race or to witness the destruction of the Christian civilization of the white race is a hundredfold worse than war. Governments throughout the world, so far as their boundaries are marked, largely exist because of race distinction, and however abhorrent war may be, I am ready to stand upon the shores of the American Continent and fight back any attempt to colonize this country with any races foreign to our blood, our sympathies, hopes, ambition, and religion.

JAPAN MUST HAVE LAND.

To be sure, we can not blame Japan for desiring more land. She must procure more land, and if need be, fight some other nation to get it or perish as a race and as a nation. She is sustaining 60,000,000 people on a territory smaller than the State of California, and she has but 15,000,000 acres more that is even susceptible of being reduced to cultivation, and this is in the mountains where it must be terraced at heavy public expense. This will sustain an increase of but one generation. Then Japan must have more land or commit race suicide.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

In this connection it brings to our attention another policy, and that is the disposition of the Philippine Islands, upon which we are spending many thousands of dollars annually, and upon which we have already spent many millions of dollars. I would grant Japan these islands, in order to give them a foothold near their door, and in a climate to which they are inured but unsuited to the American, and thus serve the double purpose of probably preventing future war, and at the same time make of Japan a friendly nation, lying as a buffer between us and the other Asiatic nations, because we do not need the Philippines either for colonization or for strength. Rather is it from every light a source of weakness. Should we engage in a war with Japan, the proximity of the Philippines to the Japanese nation would whip us in our effort to carry our armament such a great distance. I call your attention to the fact that "distance" is one of the greatest elements in warfare. "Distance" whipped Napoleon when he went to Moscow, and in his retreat "scattered his legions like winter's withered leaves." "Distance" whipped England in her two wars with us. "Distance" enabled a few thousand Texas patriots to whip Santa Anna's forces, when he had to come to them to conquer them, and "distance" will enable us in a war between us and Japan to whip her off our shores, but it will whip us off the Philippines. So I submit the wisest policy would be to sell to Japan the Philippine Islands and hold the territory on our own shores, and if we expand, expand only upon the American Continent, in a climate to which we are inured and upon which we can live and prosper. There is but one objection to this transfer, and that is that the Philippines are, in a measure, Christianized, but this can be obviated by stipulating as an irrevocable part and condition of the transfer that missionaries and ministers of the Christian religion of every nation and of every creed shall have the right forever to go into the Philippines to teach and convert the people, and that one or all the Christian nations shall intervene for their protection.

MY CRITICS AND DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

I wish to digress a moment to reply to the criticisms of certain persons and certain newspaper periodicals to their pretended interest in peace. We hear them say that no Member of Congress should announce a policy that might mean war unless he be willing to go. To this I reply that when my country needs me, either in a defensive or offensive war, I am ready to follow the flag, and I want to say further that the Army should not determine when war should be proclaimed, because war is the business of the Army and they should not be permitted to govern the policy of when it should occur, but exercise it only after the civilian has declared its necessity. On this point I desire to quote from a speech delivered by Dr. Lyman Abbott on May 14, 1913, at the nineteenth annual Lake Mohonk conference of international arbitration and peace. This speech was delivered by Dr. Abbott upon his being elected president of that great father of all international American arbitration conferences. Dr. Abbott is not a stranger to us. We have read so many of his books, as well as his learned articles which have come from his pen as editor of The Outlook. It may be said of him more truly than any other citizen that his mind is "an intellectual ocean, whose waves beat against all shores of human thought." Listen to his words, as follows:

"The reason that greater progress has been made is that for the last 14 years our appeal has not been primarily for peace but for justice and for peace following justice. [Applause.]

"In the present condition of the human race the armed man is sometimes a necessary means of securing peace, because a necessary means of securing justice. A somewhat humorous illustration of this self-evident truth was afforded at a meeting of the Peace Congress in St. Louis last week. A peace delegate on his way to a disarmament meeting encountered a pickpocket. A struggle ensued. The peace delegate was not a good fighter and was getting the worst of it. Two men came to his rescue. The mêlée became serious, and one man got a black eye. Then an armed policeman appeared on the scene and brought about both justice and peace. It is not without significance that we call our policemen officers of the peace. [Laughter and applause.] It is not without significance that we call our minor judges, whose business it is to deal with the first beginners of injustice, justices of the peace. It is not only the armed man, but sometimes the armed force, that is necessary. * * * Ladies and gentlemen, if it is right for one man to interfere to prevent an insult being given to a helpless woman, it was right for the Bulgarians to interfere to prevent their wives and daughters from being carried into the harems of the Turks, and right to suffer whatever consequences were necessary to furnish that protection.

"Combativeness and destructiveness are not vicious elements in human nature. They are not to be destroyed; they are to be guided by reason and directed to beneficent ends. There are times when war is necessary. The history of the world would be poorer than it is if there were no record of war on its pages; if there had been no heroes who dared to fight for justice and liberty; no William of Orange to array his country against the persecuting sword of the Duke of Alva; no Cromwell to stand for civil liberty in England; no Washington to lead the forces of America against foreign despotism. Christianity does not emasculate man. Christians have not stood and ought not to stand for peace at any price. They have recognized, and they ought to recognize, that there are worse things than war, bad as war is. Constantine was led to adopt Christianity primarily because he found the primitive Christians in the fourth century better soldiers man for man than the pagan Romans. Never have there been braver or better soldiers than the Puritan Ironsides, whose heroism gave liberty to England and to America.

"This truth the Bible abundantly recognizes. First pure, then peaceable, is its motto. In Paul's description of the Kingdom of God, righteousness, peace, and joy, righteousness precedes peace. There is no honorable peace which is not founded on righteousness. When Isaiah prophesied that men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and shall not learn war any more, he based this expectation on his faith that the time will come when men will walk in the paths of God and the law will go out of Zion, enforced, not by the sword and spear, but by the intelligent conscience of self-governing peoples. 'If it be possible,' says the Apostle, 'as much as lieth in you live peaceably with all men.' It is not always possible. It does not always lie in us so to live. On the contrary, it is quite possible to pay too high a price for peace. Our fathers would have paid too high a price if, in 1776, they had bartered liberty for peace. The generation of the Civil War would have paid too high a price if, for the sake of peace, they had allowed the country to be rent in twain and a great slave empire to be founded, extending from the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico, and perhaps including Mexico and Central America. [Applause.]

"Enduring peace is possible only where it is the fruit of justice. The blow of the fist, the gleam of the sword, and the bark of the cannon will continue until some other power than that of the armed man is found to protect innocence from injustice. 'War,' says Charles Sumner, 'is a public armed contest between nations, under the sanction of international law, to establish justice between them.' With the convening of The Hague conference in 1899 there was wrought into the consciousness of mankind a better plan than war for establishing justice between the nations. The plan of a supreme court of the nations was not novel, but with the proposals of the American delegates to The Hague conference such a court ceased to be the dream of the prophet and became a purpose of statesmen. So long as mankind thought that there was no other method of securing justice between nations than armed conflict so long the plaintive cry of peace fell on unlistening ears. When a plan of securing justice was proposed that promised to avoid the tragedy of war, mankind began to listen. The proposal is nothing less than a substitution of an appeal to reason for the appeal to force. But before this substitute can be successfully adopted three conditions are necessary.

"There must be developed in the civilized nations a sense of justice strong enough to overcome race, religious, and national prejudices.

"There are two ways of promoting peace—one by making our Nation so weak that it can not fight; the other by making it so strong that it need not fight. Weakness is a terrible provocative of war. The War of 1812 would not have occurred if Great Britain had believed that we had a Navy adequate to protect our citizens upon the sea. It is doubtful if the Civil War would have occurred if Andrew Jackson had been in the President's chair instead of James Buchanan; it is certain that it would have been of shorter duration and of less terrible extent. America is one of the richest countries on the globe. Make it also one of the weakest and it would invite assault. It is the first duty of the Government to protect its people in the enjoyment of life and liberty. If it fails to afford such protection, it has no right to exist. * * * We can establish peace only by establishing justice. To do this we must by voice and pen develop in the Nation a public conscience which will demand the fulfillment of arbitration treaties already made before undertaking to make other treaties still more general. We must seek to develop a public sentiment in the civilized nations of the world which will both create a tribunal for the establishment of international justice and peacefully enforce its decisions; and until that is accomplished and the appeal to reason is accepted by our own people and the peoples of the world as a real substitute for the appeal to force, we must maintain an Army and Navy adequate for the maintenance of justice both within our borders and in our international relations; and we must never forget that our object in this movement is the establishment of international justice and of peace only as it is founded upon justice. [Applause.]"

I shall add to Dr. Abbott's able presentation of this doctrine that justice is the price of peace by quoting from another installment of our international duty as delivered by me in this House on September 4:

"Mr. Chairman, I am as much opposed to war as any man, but there are worse things than war. Rapine and murder are worse than war. In the early history of this Government we have other illustrations that showed the absurdity of moral suasion. We believe in moral suasion, but will it reach a mob? If it will, why do we not appeal to the anarchists of this country and remove the guards from the gates at the White House? If moral suasion is a sufficient protection against crime, why not repeal all the laws which provide hanging for murder? Let us be practical men. We know from experience that no argument will convince a mob except that argument be spoken through the voice of the cannon and musket.

"Peace and moral force—that is a great philosophy. It is the thing we hope for, the thing we are driving to, but which we shall never reach until the entire world is Christianized and they understand the philosophy of Christianity. The altruism or philosophy of Christianity is 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.' I call your attention to the philosophy drawn from history, that the first thing people think about when they first embrace Christianity is to fight. The spread of Christianity over Europe and the organization of the crusades to redeem the holy sepulcher is an illustration of that. The awakening of China and the breaking out of secession is another illustration. If I had time I could produce other illustrations to prove this nature of mankind.

"The philosophy of Christianity—'Love thy neighbor as thyself'—in its logical stage and Confucianism are the only doctrines in the world that believe in peace. Confucius said, 'Build a wall around you; let no one go out and no one come in; live at home'; and under that doctrine for 4,000 years the Chinese lived in peace.

"We choose to embark on the seas of world relations and a world commerce. Then we see that thereafter we have established expensive consular service throughout the world, with ambassadors and foreign banks, as provided in the bill just passed Congress, and we established the gold dollar that would be good all over the world. What for? To encourage commerce. We have long since learned that commerce is the handmaid of agriculture, and without commerce agriculture could not live."

INTERVENTION TO PREVENT WAR.

Many of our citizens forget that in the affairs of American Republics intervention does not mean war. We intervened, it is true, in Cuba, at the same time declaring war against Spain. It seems to be the policy of some to overlook the obligations of this Government until we are compelled to declare war against Mexico, but we can intervene for the protection of life and property. Cleveland's Secretary of State, Mr. Olney, once said, "The United States is practically sovereign on this continent."

Secretary Bayard, under Cleveland's first administration, when appealed to by a man named Cutting, a newspaper man, who published editorials like an ordinary American editor and as a result was arrested and imprisoned in Chihuahua—Secretary Bayard said to the Mexican authorities, "Give Cutting a trial and if he has violated the law, under international policy, he will have to suffer." They first declined to give him a trial, because he had violated no law, and then Secretary Bayard gave to Mexico the ultimatum: "You must try him or turn him loose"; and Mexico liberated him. Many citizens will remember that incident. The people of Texas, where I then resided, will recall that we all felt that there would be war, and every American said Bayard was right. They recognized the principle of international law that any citizen from any nation, where treaties existed authorizing them to live in their country, had the right of protection of his home government, providing he while living in such foreign country obeyed its laws and did not participate in its politics. This has ever been the rule, that if the foreigner attends to his own affairs, stays out of the politics and away from the voting places, and obeys the laws he is entitled to the protection of his own government; and it is the duty of his government to demand compensation for any unjustified assault upon him or any destruction of his property, and the foreign government where he is sojourning is liable to him for compensation for such wrongdoing, just as we a few days ago appropriated $6,000 to the heirs of an Italian who had been mobbed without authority of law in Florida. Proof that he was an Italian citizen, that he was not participating in our affairs, and that he was obeying our laws was all the proof necessary; nor does it follow that war will follow in an effort to secure to the citizen in a foreign land such protection to prevent such destruction of property or loss of life.

THE TRUE AMERICAN POLICY.

For years before 1912 we had taken a negative policy, but this time we pursued a constructive policy, and on that it may be asked, What is a constructive policy? I insist, Mr. Chairman, that intervention does not mean a declaration of war against Mexico or any other nation. It does not include imperialism, a large standing army or navy. It does not mean the acquisition of territory or involve any other program of force or sordid, commercial, dollar diplomacy nor a violation of any sound, progressive policy of peace. A sound, just, and comprehensive American policy consists in this: A well-equipped and thoroughly trained but relatively small army and navy; the extension of American commerce to all seas and ports of the world; peace, honest friendship, and commerce with all nations, entangling alliances with none; adherence to and maintenance of the Monroe doctrine as the sheet anchor of protection of republican institutions in the Western Hemisphere; the protection of American citizens, their property, homes, and families, whether found in America, upon our borders, or in foreign lands throughout the world; the preservation and integrity of the Nation and the glory of the flag; the encouragement of liberty everywhere and the extension of republican government and democratic institutions throughout the two Americas—all this by peaceful diplomacy if possible, by force if necessary.

That, Mr. Chairman, I conceive to be the genuine American doctrine. I am as strong an advocate of peace as anybody, and it is no new doctrine. I call attention to failures in the past in an effort for peace by an impractical policy. Up to 1807 we had for 20 years paid the Barbary States more than a million dollars to keep them from arresting American citizens. In 1787 we made a treaty with Morocco, in which we paid them $80 000 for the treaty not to make slaves of Americans. In 1796 we made one with Algiers, and paid $40,000 for the liberation of 13 Americans, and then we gave them tribute of $25,000 a year for exemption from capture of our people. In 1800, when the tribute was sent upon an American war vessel, William Bainbridge, the great American citizen, was compelled to go to Constantinople at the instance of the Bey, flying the Turkish flag. He then said: "I hope the next time that I pay tribute I can bear it with arms." Finally, after an effort to restore peace, paying them tribute every year, they, the Barbary States, themselves could not be satisfied and declared war on us, and what was the result? Decatur and Bainbridge went there and wrecked their ships. William Eaton, of the United States Army, went into the interior and organized an army and came across the border to dethrone the reigning Bey. When that treaty was concluded the first Christian Nation in the world said to the Barbary States: "We will pay you no more tribute." And yet that war cost us less; in all that war there were fewer Americans imprisoned and fewer murders committed than there were during the 20 years that we paid the Barbary States tribute in the name of peace, in a vain effort to preserve peace by our servility. Such will our experience prove to be by such cowardly policy with the groups of banditti in Mexico. Less loss of life and property will occur if we will boldly stand upon our treaty rights with Mexico and make their mobs to understand that no American citizen must be harmed.

OTHER INSTANCES OF INTERVENTION.

In 1891 we went to the extent of intervening in Chile to decide between two contesting parties as to which should have control of the Chilean Government. Our Navy patrolled the Pacific coast to prevent arms from coming to one of them, and in that case arms were attempted to be furnished to the unfavored party by the steamer Itata, and one of our men-of-war chased the Itata for this violation of our intervention for a thousand miles and brought her back to San Diego.

The citizens will also recall the Baltimore episode in 1893. The Baltimore, with 117 men, landed at Valparaiso, Chile, by order of Secretary Blaine to protect property of American citizens. As a result an apology was made, $75,000 damage indemnity paid for 2 men killed and 18 wounded, although a judicial inquiry was had and a dismissal by local authorities.

During the Civil War we intervened in Brazil, and five men-of-war were sent to Brazilian waters under Admiral Bingham to protect American interests.

In 1894 occurred the Bluefields case in Nicaragua.

In 1895 was, as I stated, the Venezuela question.

In the Spanish War we had trouble again with Brazil and sent a warship to Central American waters for the protection of American interests, and had a difficulty with Ecuador over the refusal of the consul general to answer the service of a summons.

We made a peremptory demand upon Colombia for damages sustained by two newspapers in Panama owned by Americans. In 1902 Colombia seized some American property, and when we sent a warship into her waters she returned it.

We put straight up to Chile, in 1909, the demand to pay the Alsop claim.

Several European nations whose citizens had been the victims of Santo Domingo, who violated contracts, were talking of seizing the customhouse to repay them. President Roosevelt, under the pressure of our moral obligation under the Monroe doctrine, accepted the responsibility under which the United States took control of the administration of the customhouse in order to repay claims of Americans and other foreigners for property damaged.

Within the past three years we have twice landed troops in Central America and taken an active part in their internal affairs under the moral obligation of the Monroe doctrine.

The very purpose of encouraging American citizens to go into another nation is to carry on commerce and trade. We defend that trade. In 1842 we sent a navy to China to conduct the ships of merchandise through the straits. In 1843 we landed the marines on the coast of China, when there were then only 200 Americans in all China, to protect those Americans, or a portion of them, from a mob. In 1863 we opened the ports of Japan by force of arms in obedience to a treaty made with Japan in 1852 or 1853 by Perry. And never have we had war when we stood upon the rights of treaties, nor will we have war when we stand upon the rights of treaty, although we have intervened more than 40 times to protect the lives and property of our citizens in foreign lands.

MODERN MONROE DOCTRINE.

The Monroe doctrine as applied in modern times is no better stated than in the message of President Roosevelt to Congress in 1904:

> All that this country desires is to see that neighboring countries are stable, orderly, and prosperous. Any country whose people conduct themselves well can count on our hearty friendship. Flagrant wrongdoing, or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized society, may in America, as elsewhere, ultimately require intervention by some civilized nation on the Western Hemisphere. Adherence of the United States to the Monroe doctrine may force the United States, however reluctantly, in flagrant cases of such wrongdoing or impotence, to the exercise of an international police power.

Who is there that will dispute this doctrine? If undisputed, how can he deny the existence of "wrongdoing" or of the "impotence" of Mexico, or of her "general loosening of the ties of civilized society"? Is it not time for our Republic to exercise an international police power—not war, but police power?

Everyone agrees that Mexico is without authoritative government—that neither the revolutionists nor the de facto government of Huerta can establish order or preserve peace within their respective jurisdictions. Every breeze brings from the border of Mexico fresh outrages upon American citizens' lives and property. Gen. Sallizar, one of the revolutionists, rounded up a group of Americans last year and said to them:

> We have driven away your cattle, burned your homes, and raped your women. What can we do to make your country fight?

What more is necessary for the exercise of "international police power" to restore order and protect lives and property?

Upon the same principle that an individual would run to the rescue of his wife and daughter, Dr. Abbott justifies the Balkans in fighting to prevent their wives and daughters from being carried away to the Turkish harem; and by the same logic and moral principle should this Republic go to the rescue of the homes and families of American citizens sojourning in Mexico and to the cry of American womanhood. For less cause than outraging our womanhood and tramping upon the ashes of our dead did we intervene in the Spanish possession of Florida before we bought that country. We sent our armed forces there to protect property, and what kind of property? Slaves who had run away and were carried by the Seminole Indians into the Spanish territory of Florida. Nor did we stop to consider what it would cost to carry out that obligation. The records show that it cost the lives of three soldiers and $80,000 for every slave we brought back.

STATESMANSHIP OF GEN. JACKSON.

Gen. Andrew Jackson said to the Secretary of War:

> It will not do to continue in this manner this warfare. We must chase the Spaniards and the Seminoles into Spanish territory and punish them there.

Recognizing the possibility of war, he pointed out the desirability of our owning Florida, and said:

> If the President wants Florida, all he has to do is to tip it off to me, and I will get such possession that Spain will readily cede it to us in 60 days, and that without involving the Government.

An instance of a far-sighted policy which extended our domain. Later, when he was President, he said to Sam Houston:

> Go to Texas and aid that revolution. The United States will be neutral, but no American will be punished for going across the border.

And the "Twin Sisters," the cannon that did the effective work at San Jacinto, was purchased by the ladies of Cincinnati and sent to Houston.

Another policy of President and Cabinet which brought additional domain, and, indeed, it may be said of Andrew Jackson that through his influence, directly or indirectly, we have Florida, Louisiana, and Texas as a portion of our domain, and who is it now that would contend that this was not a wise policy, and who is it now that would contend that we do not need these countries?

Why did we seek Louisiana? It was wholly due to our interest in a larger commerce and in affording a market to the farmers of the Mississippi Valley. The first controversy arose between the original Spanish authorities over the right of the farmers to deposit their sugar, cotton, and tobacco at New Orleans, and the Spanish intendent, after authority had been granted by treaty, nullified the "right of deposit," which crippled the market of the pioneer farmers. In the meantime Louisiana was secretly ceded to France, and Mr. Jefferson submitted to our French representatives, Madison and Livingston, a request to purchase Orleans, when Napoleon, realizing that on account of its great "distance," the English Navy might take it away from him in a day, ordered his secretary of state to sell to us the entire Territory of Louisiana, then extending westward to the Rocky Mountains, for 65,000,000 francs. Livingston and Madison bought it all, solely to get Orleans and the "right of deposit," for commerce, and yet prior to this purchase we had deliberately intervened, in obedience to treaty rights, such as to have offended the Spanish nation if they had yet owned it.

THE DIFFICULTY IN REPAYING OUR CITIZENS.

There is another phase to this question touching life and property in Mexico. The State Department a few days ago quoted the correct rule of international law when Secretary Bryan sent to the American consul at Hermosillo an opinion of the State Department to the effect that the Mexican Government could not be held responsible, ordinarily, to alien residents for injury they may receive within his territory from "insurgents whose conduct he could not control." This is undoubtedly the correct enunciation of international law as we have recognized it.

The United States Government recognized in settling with Spain that the destruction of American property in Cuba prior to American intervention was not chargeable to Spain, because Spain had no control over Cuba, on account of the Cuban revolution. Now, let us analyze this situation a bit. It has been estimated that some five States in northern Mexico are under the absolute control of the insurgents, and six others under partial control, while the remaining territory is under the control of Huerta, whose Government we refuse to recognize, and in my opinion properly so; so after peace is restored, should we call upon Mexico for compensation for American property which has been destroyed, estimated now at $510,000,000, the President of Mexico then in control, and who restores order in Mexico, could reply to the United States demand: "We are not chargeable for any destruction of property, for the reason that no Government existed in Mexico as was recognized by the United States," and if the United States then establishes the point that a de facto government existed under Huerta, Mexico can at least invoke the international law as to the country under the control of the insurgents where 30,000 Americans out of forty-odd thousand live and had their property, and consequently they have lost their all. The Mexicans will make the further plea that the American citizens did not "exercise ordinary precaution to preserve their property," which under the general law of the land is incumbent upon every man, because they fled Mexico and left their property without guard or attendant, and that without the solicitation of the Mexican authorities. Now, in this difference of opinion as to what should have been done and what we should now do, I submit the wisest policy would have been intervention the moment an American citizen was molested, and when I refer to American citizens I do not mean those who held great concessions of mines under syndicates, because those have never resided in Mexico, but there were seven colonies composed originally of American citizens, who have gone there and builded homes, opened up farms, established roads, and in "Colonia Diez," in Chihuahua, they had with their own money builded an agricultural and mechanical college, and a Member of this House, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, had, as he tells me, visited that college and made a speech to these American students who lived in that colony.

But we have said to them, "Come out of there." They have come back home to compete in the labor markets, wherein they can not be of any service to other American citizens and without hope of regaining their homes or their property. But little hope is left a poor man who through years of perseverance, persistent labor, and self-denial in a pioneer country established a home, to be immediately stripped of that home and all that he owns and thrown back into the cold contest of competition to regain it again. No; I would have gone into Mexico and protected these citizens on the spot, especially in view of the international law; in view of their right under treaties made with Mexico for them to live there; in view of the further fact that Mexico invited them there, granting them the right to buy and improve these homes and reserve their citizenship in the great Republic; and in view of the further fact that there are three several clauses in the Mexican Constitution defining and granting the rights of foreigners living in Mexico. In this connection I desire to quote from another speech, under the five-minute rule, delivered by me in the House on September 4, on the deficiency appropriation bill:

"Mr. Chairman, this appropriation seems to be intended to assist American citizens to leave Mexico. I want to preface my remarks by saying that I have no property in Mexico and no relatives there; neither has any member of my family any property in Mexico.

"This is the first time in the history of diplomacy that I have ever known a request for the citizens of one country to leave another country in the face of the declaration that there would be no war. Let us analyze this proposition of paying the way of American citizens out of Mexico and a listing of their property. Who is to guarantee the repayment of that property in the event that it is destroyed by the bandits in Mexico? Evidently this Government can not do it under its present policy. It will fall upon the future administration of Mexico. Let us assume that it will amount to no more than $1,000 apiece for each of the 40,000 Americans in Mexico, on an average. That would make it amount to more than $40,000,000, and it is fair to say that it will amount in the aggregate to a billion dollar claim upon Mexico, which will stagger that country, without counting the expense of its civil butchery.

"And where will those American citizens ever get the return of their property? Yesterday we witnessed here a controversy over the payment of $6,000 to the heirs of an Italian subject who had been murdered in this country. What will it be with Mexico after the trouble is over, if it ever ends, and we demand the payment of that $1,000,000,000? It will end there unless we enforce it by arms, and it will cost more to enforce it then than to protect this property now."

COMANCHE INDIANS CAUGHT OUR CUE.

The policies since the Civil War touching international relations have too often been illustrative of a story for which I am indebted to Gov. Douglas H. Johnston, of the Chickasaw Nation, told about the Comanche Indians in a very early day. He said that before white settlements were made there came a drought, when there was no corn, no supplies, stock water had dried up, and the cattle were dying out or driven off the range. The Indians were about to starve, and realizing the Government's ignorance of their condition they called a council to determine upon ways and means of making known to the Government their condition, since their petitions and memorials had been ignored through "red tape." It was finally decided that if they would kill a white man the Government would hear of that. But there were no white men, except the Indian farmer sent among them by the department, "Farmer Jones," and it was suggested that they would kill Farmer Jones; and when, after further deliberation, they realized that Farmer Jones did not amount to much anyway and the Government would never hear of it. Then it was suggested that they ride across the country and kill a cowboy, and upon second thought they realized that would not do. They said, "Cowboy got nothing; cowboy he kill you; he never tell Government." And then it was suggested that they would kill the Indian agent; he was an officer and "somebody"; the Government would hear about that; so, in order to bring their condition to the attention of the Government, they killed the Indian agent. The trouble has been that we await the blowing up of a Maine or the killing of some high officer before we think of our obligations. Now, the Government ought to have heard the cry of Farmer Jones as quickly as it heard the cry of the Indian agent. The cry of the American womanhood should be heard in every land in the darkest corners of the earth as quickly as the cry of an ambassador, and this Government should be ready to go to her rescue, and that without calculating the cost of her protection. But it seems we have forgotten our reasons for taxing ourselves in time of peace to maintain our Army and Navy. There are wholesome reasons for this policy, but we seem not to use them for that purpose.

PURPOSE OF STANDING ARMY IN TIME OF PEACE.

There was an instance which happened upon the Mexican border since the beginning of the Mexican trouble that is illustrative of the laxity in some quarters of the United States Army toward leading a life of indolence, luxury, and aristocracy. Less than two years ago Sallizar came across the line and took from the United States military camp a rapid-firing gun and 250,000 rounds of ammunition and hauled it off in a wagon in broad, open daylight. Of course, no one was on guard; they were enjoying, doubtless, a convivial revelry and had but little thought of the duties and obligations incumbent upon them, and in this connection I want to incorporate here another speech of mine, delivered on the 6th day of September, under the five-minute rule for discussion, after the Clerk reported the items for appropriation:

"Subsistence of the Army, fiscal year 1913, $229,625.16; water and sewers, fiscal year 1913, $443.85; in all, $654,448.49.

"Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, possibly what I intend to say would have more bearing upon the general appropriation bill that will arise in the next Congress. Here is a large sum appropriated for Army purposes. I have a notion that the use of these Army purposes is not what ought to be made.

"I am not ready to vote for a continuation of Army and Navy appropriations if they are not to be used for the purpose for which they are legitimately intended. The only arguments I know of that will sustain appropriations for the Army and Navy in time of peace are these: First, to repel an unexpected invasion; second, to suppress insurrection or riot; third, to enforce neutrality and treaty obligations; fourth, to protect our citizens in foreign lands and commerce on the high seas; and, fifth, to form a nucleus around which an army may be organized and officered in case of war.

"Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. He is not discussing the matter before the committee.

"Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Now, the gentleman's imagination, he will find, is not true. I am discussing the propriety of making appropriations for the Army and Navy.

"Mr. MANN. Yes; but that is not involved in these items.

"Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am speaking of the whole paragraph. I perhaps might have put it in a little earlier, but I thought I would wait until the entire sums were reported.

"Mr. MANN. The gentleman waited too long. I make the point of order——

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] is in order.

"Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I hope my time will not be taken up by the gentleman's objections. Mr. Chairman, the objects of an army or navy are those that I have stated. If any man can give any reason for the taxation of the American people in time of peace for an army and navy for any other purpose, I would like to know it.

"But we find that our armies are too often used for some other purpose. We find in the organization of the military establishment of this country that it is largely used to aid certain towns and localities. We find, in addition, that the scattering of our Army posts has crippled the efficiency of the Army. I can prove by the military experts of this Government or of any other first-class power in the world that a stronger military power than our military arm can be inaugurated for $5,000,000 less than it costs to keep up our present establishment. Besides this, they are used to build up an aristocracy. In the Naval Academy, when we appoint a boy as a congressional right, if the boy fail, before the boy knows it or before I or one of you know it, some man who is an officer in the Army or Navy will send a telegram, 'Your boy has failed, and therefore I want my boy appointed.' The only aristocracy built up in this country has been built up through the Army and Navy. To my thinking, that is a wrong use and a wrong purpose for the Army. And then, again, we find that the Army and Navy are used to promote the Steel Trust; but the greatest abuse of its use is when it is made to fire on a lot of laboring men in a strike.

"Now, if these are the purposes for which our Army and Navy are to be used, and they are not to repel insurrection, to enforce neutrality, to protect commerce and the rights of treaties, and for the protection of life and property of the American citizen in foreign lands, I am ready to quit voting for an army and navy in time of peace."

There is another reason why we should not permit this anarchy to exist at our door, and that is the example to our own citizens. This ought to be apparent to everyone, and hence I will not take time to discuss this phase of the subject; but I confess that the main object is the protection of American property and lives, and especially womanhood, and beyond and above all to prevent the Mexican Government from granting to Japan concession to colonize Mexico.

CONDITION OF MEXICO.

I do not believe that, if left alone, Mexico will ever rise from its present condition. It has some 15,000,000 people, only about 6,000,000 of whom can read and write. Of these 6,000,000 about one-half are plutocrats pure and simple. They own all the property; they have no regard for patriotism, law, order, or the rights of other men. They have held the Government under despotic Diaz for their own selfish interests, and they do not care for order unless it is to continue them in possession of the property of Mexico. Of the 9,000,000 that can not read nor write the large body of them are Indians, and, I might say, as is the experience of all, they are among the best citizens there, as one of the contractors said to me, fleeing from Mexico, as a laboring man "The more Indian there is in his blood the better he is." These are the descendants of the old Aztecs, who possessed a high degree of civilization at the conquest by Cortez. The records show that although the great body of them were sun worshipers, yet they had a knowledge of the omnipotent, impersonal One, an unseen God which all Christianity worships.

These Indians under the Diaz administration had been treated so cruelly that they are against any Mexican domination. They aided in the destruction of the Diaz government, and when Madero came in they turned against him. They think infinitely more of an American citizen than they do the white Spaniard, and they have for 30 years harbored a deadly hate for the Mexican, who has despoiled and murdered them. Hence, I say it will be a long time before order can be restored; and, indeed, when it is over it will be because of a weakened condition—so weak that they can not fight. We may have at our door a repetition of what occurred in the Republic of Paraguay, in South America, during the cruel and despotic reign of Lopez and Lynch. For 20 years a revolution and banditti reign existed in Paraguay. At its beginning there were 700,000 citizens. At its end they had 300,000 women and but 125,000 old men and boys and had lost the unit of government, the family, which resulted in loose morals and in in-and-in breeding, and consequently imbecility and lunacy; and they were compelled to enact a law giving to every Paraguayan woman a pension for life who became the mother of two children by any foreigner, whether in or out of wedlock, so that the race might not be weakened by imbecility and idiocy. For Mexico herself, for her own preservation and interest, the wisest policy has been and now is for the United States to intervene and stop this civil butchery.

NATIONALITY AND INDIVIDUALISM BALANCED.

In our onward progress toward a centralized despotism, crashing States and their local police power, usurping the rights of the individual citizen, without regard for that just balance of power so essential for national strength and the fullest amount of liberty; in our mad rush onward toward a repetition of the Roman system which caused its destruction, are we to lose sight, as did Rome, of the rights of individuals? Under the Roman Empire every Roman was for Rome, and Rome as a nation was never regarded as for the citizen or individual. Every right, every individual effort, and thought was surrendered to the interest of Rome. When the farmers of Rome, by their splendid knowledge of agriculture, who as farmers surpassed any now known to the Continent of Europe, began to develop an individuality so characteristic of the farmer as an occupation, the Roman "agrarian laws" were passed, which placed the title of all agricultural land in the nation of Rome, so as to enable the nation to jerk from under the farmer his possession at any time, leaving him only a "possessory right," and this system so discouraged him, so weakened his individuality that he lost heart, and with it the method and knowledge of production. High cost of living followed, the empire and its civilization fell, ushering in all of those superstitious centuries known as the "dark ages." Are we to repeat this history? Are we to overlook the interest of the individual? Are we to declare that every American is for the Nation, and the obligation of the Nation to protect the individual nowhere exists? If not, then the Nation must heed the cry of every man and every woman to protect him, his family, and his home, whether he be in America, upon our border or in foreign lands. By this system, and this alone, will we maintain that equilibrium between nationality and individual rights so essential for the protection of the individual.

I am appealing for the doctrine, not that we should overlook the "sinking of a Maine," an assault upon a minister or an ambassador or one of our embassies in a foreign land, or the killing of an "Indian agent," but I am making appeal that this Republic may heed the cry of "Farmer Jones" as quickly as it would heed the cry of the "Indian agent"; that we must heed the cry of the "woodchopper," as did Great Britain in Nicaragua, and we must heed the cry of American womanhood as quickly as we would heed the cry of an assault upon the American ambassador. This doctrine, under international law, between treaty-making powers granting it, is so just and so thoroughly recognized by every civilized nation that the enforcement of it is but to declare it with emphasis and earnestness, and a declaration with earnestness to protect it has never been the cause of war. War comes in where justice ceases. Exercise of justice and humanity and national declaration therefor should ever be sustained by the Army and Navy if necessary.

BRITISH REGARD FOR HER CITIZENS.

In the Nicaraguan revolution of some 20 years ago the President, thinking some American citizens had sided with the insurgents, rounded up some 200 American citizens and imprisoned them. It happened to be in one of our administrations when the policy was to call them "American renegades," unworthy our protection, but among them was one man, a woodchopper, who set up the plea that he was a British subject. Nicaragua disputed this, and the British Government said, "We will see." They found that he was born in Canada, reared in the United States, but never had taken out naturalization papers and never had attempted to vote, now in Nicaragua as a woodchopper, and upon these facts the British Government said to Nicaragua: "You must pay the expenses of this investigation, which is $50,000, and compensate him for his imprisonment." He would not have been arrested if it had been known that he was a British subject, because Great Britain never hesitates to exercise her rights under international law to protect her citizens everywhere.

THE HOME THE CITIZEN'S CASTLE.

William Pitt, England's great statesman, once said in the House of Commons, in an effort to check British harsh exactions upon the American Colonies:

> Though a British subject live in a log-wall hut, the roof may cave in and the door may creak upon its hinges; the winds may howl around it; the snow and hail and rain may enter it, but no King can without his consent—his home is his castle.

Such is the theory and practice of the British Government. Such is the theory of our Government, and I but plead for its practice. If we expect every American citizen, wherever found on the earth, to respond to his country's call, we must give him protection when he calls for it. But would you, placed in Mexico or elsewhere to live, being stripped of your property, your home burned, and your family outraged, feel like responding to the call for volunteers if this country should embark in a struggle with some other nation? Take the question home to yourself and apply it in a concrete way. The home of the citizen should be protected wherever found, whether that be amid the palatial residences of the denizens here in Washington on the Avenue of the Presidents; whether among the mansions on Fifth Avenue, New York, whether amid the huts and hovels of the Mississippi Valley, or but the tented traveler on his westward journey—wherever found, to use the language of the Baltimore platform, "whether in America, upon our border, or in foreign lands throughout the world," the flag of our Republic should go with Them.

O Flag of our Country, wave on, wave ever! May it never be substituted by the ensign of European monarchy or fail us as our standard in the Asiatic race conflicts of the future.

Flag of our Country, wave on, wave ever! May it ever remain the sheet anchor of the Monroe doctrine and American institutions and the inspiration of every lover of political, civil, and religious liberty throughout the world.

O! Flag of our Country, wave on, wave ever! May every American be wise enough, brave enough, patriotic enough, to unfurl it as the shield of protection as readily as the emblem of liberty and love!

Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

OF

HON. CHARLES C. CARLIN,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 13, 1913.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, the subject of our foreign and domestic commerce is one of which the whole American people are deeply interested, and as there has recently been an exhaustive review of this important subject by the present Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, I am glad to give to the House and the American people the opportunity of an immediate insight into the great work of the Bureau of Commerce and its relation to our domestic and foreign commerce. I insert, as a part of my remarks, the following:

SUMMARY OF ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, SECRETARY OF COMMERCE, BEFORE THE DETROIT BOARD OF COMMERCE, DETROIT, MICH., OCTOBER 21, 1913, ON THE SUBJECT OF RELATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE TO THE BUSINESS WORLD.

Mr. Redfield spoke in some detail of the organization of the Department of Commerce, with its nine bureaus, comprising the Lighthouse Service, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Census, the Bureau of Corporations, the Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of Navigation, the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. He said the department employed over 8,000 men, of whom but 1,500 were in Washington, the balance being scattered all over the world, from the Philippines to Hawaii, and in Alaska, while the commercial agents of the department were in South America, Asia, Africa, and Europe. A specialist on cotton manufacture has just been sent to Japan and China to study the cotton interests there; an expert on coke by-products is investigating such matters in Europe; a special monograph on commercial opportunities in South America is now in course of preparation, and it is expected within a short period to send to South America a student of banking and credit conditions in that country, who will make a special investigation of this subject.

Mr. Redfield then said: "The work of the great bureaus into which the department is divided is perhaps of more especial interest now on what I may call its inquiry, rather than its administrative side. One or more of these inquiries have aroused some public attention, but rather little is known of them in detail, and still less is known of the plans which the department purposes to undertake if funds are provided. This is a very large 'if,' for it must always be remembered that the department may propose, but Congress may effectually dispose, by declining to furnish either part or all of the funds with which the necessary work is to be done. For example, at this present moment the inquiry into the pottery industry, which is a very important and intended to be a very helpful investigation, is almost at a standstill for lack of funds. Assuming, however, that Congress will be kind, let me say what we purpose to do in the way of direct promotion of American trade abroad.

"I assume you are aware of the great advance of American export trade in manufactures during the last year. It is one of the great stories of American conquest and should fill every American with just pride. Time was, within the memory of most of you, when we sold abroad chiefly the products of our fields and farms or of our mines. We were known as a food-exporting country, and in a sense did largely feed the nations. That day is gone. Our exports of crude foodstuffs are but 18 per cent of the total, and the major place in our export trade is filled by the products of our manufactures, in which work you of Detroit have had a large share.

"So many men have believed the gospel of inability that it must be a rude shock to them to discover that while they have nursed the theory that we could not meet the foreigner on his own field, we are, as a matter of fact, doing so. To sell our manufactures abroad to the extent of over fifteen hundred millions in value in one year is no small thing; but when this continues to expand at the approximate rate of half a million dollars daily, and when in this total the largest item by far is that of fully finished manufactures, which is not only, as I have said, the biggest item, but that which is growing fastest, then the statement is very much more marked.

"We feel, therefore, in the Department of Commerce that the tide of American business in the foreign field is at the flood, and that its course should be made as easy as possible, and that the Government should assist in every practicable way toward bringing the gold of the nations into the purses of our manufacturers. The Government means to this end have been very trivial heretofore. A bare $60,000 has been the total annual fund for the promotion of commerce, and it has, upon the whole, been well used. Yet if this sum, which is much less than many a single establishment pays for its advertising, be compared with the vast volume of our foreign commerce, which is, in total, in excess of four thousand millions annually, its insignificance relative to the opportunity becomes humorously apparent.

"Nor has our organization in the foreign field been what it should be. We have had consuls, and the Consular Service has of late much improved, but the consul has much to do that is not related directly to commerce. His time for promotion of commerce is limited. He has diplomatic and administrative matters to which to attend. He is, furthermore, limited in place and may not be able, for lack of time or because of his fixed habitat, to take up some quite important inquiry at some distance from his post. We have had, in a modest way, commercial agents, some 16 in all, who have taken single subjects and inquired into them carefully. But it will be many long years before American commerce will be fed fat from the labors of 16 men, however able and earnest and well-directed their efforts may be. Germany is said, on what I think good authority, to maintain in this country permanently a force, under regular pay, of from 200 to 250 men, and I am informed that if those who receive temporary pay are included Germany has as high as a thousand or more of her commercial servants in the United States each year.

"We purpose, then, to have the beginnings of a new organization abroad, by putting into 14 important cities—including London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg in Europe; Tokyo and Peking in eastern Asia; Melbourne in Australia; Lima, Santiago, Rio, and Buenos Aires in South America—'commercial attachés,' accredited to our embassies, but under the supervision of the Department of Commerce, and reporting directly to it; men who shall be paid from $4,000 to $5,000, according to the responsibility of their post, and be each furnished with a moderate fund for traveling purposes and a clerk. The duty of these men would be to provide that general study of the industries and commerce of the nation to which they are accredited which the consul can only do in a local and limited way. The consular force and the commercial attachés would be complementary to each other, one supplying what the other lacked. One would fill the local field, the other the general field; and the commercial attaché would have the advantage that his sole duties would be given to commercial activities and none of his time be taken for diplomatic or other work.

"We purpose to retain also (and, if funds are provided, to enlarge) the force of commercial agents, so that we shall thus—if and when the organization is completed—have a threefold force, which I may thus restate: The commercial attaché, resident in the great capital, with all the industries and commerce of his nation of residence as the subject of his study; the consuls, each in his local field, doing his present work, and doing it, we hope and believe, the better for the assistance of the officer with the larger view; the commercial agents, each dealing with a particular subject, movable men going from nation to nation until the study of their particular themes is completed. This force, even if completed as we hope, will be most modest. There is not one of the great competing nations that will not far exceed us in the outlay of both money and men for the same purpose. Still, it is a beginning, and seems to us to have in it the germ of great good to all our people. To secure this beginning we shall ask of Congress in the coming year for this bureau a sum rather more than double that which has been provided for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce hitherto. It will not be, after all, a large sum, as nations reckon—about three-quarters of a million dollars in all, to cover every expense both at home and abroad—and the force, all told, exclusive of the consuls, who are under the State Department, would not exceed 150 men in this country and a total of 75 abroad.

"Another development of this same work is that we plan, if we get the funds and the sum mentioned is sufficient for the purpose, to put an office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce into each of four great cities—New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and New Orleans. The office in New York is already begun; for the others we have not as yet sufficient money. The clerk in charge in each of these cities would keep in direct touch with inquiries as to facts in the foreign field; would have at disposal the publications of the bureau, which are the reports of the consuls and of the commercial agents, and would include the reports of the commercial attachés. Inquiries could be addressed to the local offices by manufacturers as to matters in which they were interested or inquiries they would like to have made. This is merely one step in bringing the organization closer to the average business office.

"Another and perhaps more important step is to arrange that the commercial agents as they return from their foreign trips shall go from city to city in this country, visiting boards of commerce like your own, and telling face to face to such gatherings what they have seen and found in the foreign field. This might lead to their answering individual inquiries from different concerns, and would be a very direct and simple means of bringing the facts home to our industries. In short, the commercial agent would be a man who would go abroad to learn and come home to teach, and who by his written reports and his personal statements would come in direct touch with any of you who were interested in the study he was making.

"I need hardly say, however, that although this plan has been very carefully worked out and has been approved in its general form by the United States Chamber of Commerce and has the written approval of the President, it depends for its birth into actual fact upon the will of Congress. The estimates which have already been prepared for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of next July, contain this plan as it is outlined to you. If you approve the suggestions I have no doubt that a statement from you to that effect would be welcomed by the Appropriations Committee, before whom the matter must in due time come.

"Another very different and new form of activity is contemplated by the Bureau of Corporations, of the department. This bureau has done some admirable work in the past, but its resources and possibilities have not been utilized as fully as, in my judgment, they now should be. Indeed, they have been so little used that considerable sums of money have been turned back into the Treasury unused from the appropriations for the bureau. Despite this fact, we shall ask from Congress a considerably enlarged sum for the fiscal year to follow, a portion of which will be devoted—if our request is granted—to use under a very different conception of the work of the bureau from that which has heretofore prevailed in practice.

"We feel that the work of the Bureau of Corporations, with its broad powers of inquiry, should be extended out from the field of sporadic and particular investigations into this or that industry or subject, important—indeed, vital—as some of these have been in the past. It seems to us that there lies a power for usefulness in this branch of our department which has been hitherto quite unused, and which may go deep into the foundations of things which lie beneath our whole industrial structure. Just, for example, as in our Bureau of Standards we are investigating the physical and chemical and electrical laws which underlie our industries so that we may be guided by those laws in our production and may establish standards in conformity with those laws which shall measure our methods, so in connection with the Bureau of Corporations we feel that there are certain economic laws even more potent than statute laws which may be and, if possible, should be brought to light for our guidance.

"One of these studies which has received the approval of the President, and which, if funds are provided, we hope to undertake, is the question whether the 'trust' form of organization is economically efficient; whether, to state it differently, the combination of numerous factories that have hitherto operated under separate managements into a single consolidated whole under one management does necessarily provide that efficiency which is said to be the reason for such conglomerations. Is there not a law of maximum production at minimum cost beyond which point to force production under any given circumstances means an increase in cost? Are there not factors in management and methods which perhaps have been overlooked in the formation of these great organizations? Leaving out of account those with whom the law has dealt, many of them have not been distinguished by their financial success. Some of them have ceased to exist. Perhaps those that have achieved wealth by purely industrial processes are the few rather than the many. It has been said, and truly, that large capital is necessary and large production essential to low cost; that the possession of great masses of money makes possible scientific inquiry and refined methods and outlay upon promotion and research not possible to the small business. This is, of course, true so far. How far is part of the question to be determined? There are thousands of men who can be corporals in an army; perhaps not quite so many who can be sergeants, but still very many. There are a good many less who can be captains of the companies, and the proportion of majors is fewer, and of colonels less. More rare are the successful generals of brigades; still rarer those who can control an army corps, and the masters of great armies are not at all easy to find.

"The supreme masters of great forces in the world's history can almost be counted on your fingers. There are those who think this thing is true of great industries. One of the most acute lawyers connected closely with our greatest enterprises said to me that the trusts carried in them the seeds of their own decay, because it was not possible continuously to find men competent to manage well such mighty movements.

"We purpose, if we are permitted, to study this whole problem, to see what its fundamental laws are; to learn what the new factors are, if any, which come into play when production passes a certain point and great numbers of men are massed under one leadership. Here are elements of waste to be considered; here are elements of supervision to be noted; here is the question of purchasing, as affected by other matters than mere mass or volume; here is the whole human side to be thought out; and there are wise men and experienced who begin to feel that the popular sense of dread of the great overshadowing trust is perhaps only the instinctive expression of an economic law, felt rather than understood, that these aggregations are economically unsound as well as socially dangerous. Here again we can only plan. Congress must provide, and if it shall provide we shall try to undertake the inquiry."

SUMMARY OF ADDRESS BY HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, BEFORE THE BOARD OF COMMERCE, FLINT, MICH., OCTOBER 22, 1913.

Mr. Redfield spoke of the scope of the department as including the heavens above, the earth below, and the waters beneath, giving, as examples of this, the Radio Telegraph Service, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Bureau of Fisheries. Its extent he characterizes as world-wide, with active agents in the Philippines, Hawaii, Alaska, and Porto Rico, while its commercial emissaries were in every continent. An inspector has just left to study cotton conditions in eastern Asia, and a student of banking and commercial credits will shortly start for South America to develop inquiries along those lines. Studies in the by-products of coke are going on in Europe, and these are but illustrations of a service which encompasses the whole world. Speaking of the difficulties under which some of this work was done, he instanced the fact that four fishery inspectors were supposed to cover many thousands of miles of coast in Alaska. This they were expected to do, although there was no regular passenger service on most of the coast and no boats or other means of transit were provided for the inspectors. This had been brought to the attention of Congress, and it was hoped and believed that the service would no longer be left in a condition where dependence for the facilities of inspection must be placed upon the personal favor of those whom it is supposed to inspect.

In discussing the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Mr. Redfield pointed out how essential it was that this important service should be provided with the most modern apparatus in order that it might complete an accurate survey of much of the Alaskan shores, where commerce is so rapidly growing and where neither force nor equipment had been provided in sufficient quantity to make commerce wholly safe. As an illustration, he instanced the wreck in August last of the steamship State of California, which ran upon an uncharted rock in Gambier Bay, Alaska, and sank in a few minutes, carrying many persons and a valuable cargo to the bottom. This was really a needless waste of human life. It has long been known that pinnacle rocks, such as caused this wreck, are not easily found by the ordinary sounding lead line; but a device—a wire drag—is now in use which will infallibly detect them. This device is used upon the Atlantic, but none has been provided for the Pacific, and in Alaska it is especially needed because of the peculiar formation of the sea bottom there. It is earnestly hoped that Congress will provide at the next session at least two sets of this apparatus and a sufficiently increased force of men to permit a thorough survey in the most modern fashion of the entire Alaskan coast without unnecessary delay.

There are two very different lines of the department's activity in which I think you may be interested. One because it has been very widely discussed and made the subject of general comment; the other because it bears a very direct relation to every dweller in an important city, although it has hardly been before mentioned in public discussion.

When it was suggested some months ago that the inquiry powers of the department might under certain conditions be used to learn whether conditions in any general industry were such as to justify a reduction of wages when alleged to be made because of tariff changes there appeared very general comments on the alleged action, which comments were chiefly remarkable for their vigor in dealing with an assumed state of facts that did not exist. An attitude of courteous candor which was not for a moment misunderstood by the gentlemen who were directly concerned was so altered in the telling of it as to put the department in the position of menacing individuals and establishments with hostile intrusion if excuse could be found for so doing.

When the direful results which prophets of evil foretold did not occur the facile imaginations of some editors led them to say that the Secretary of Commerce had withdrawn from his attitude. The Secretary of Commerce has done no such thing. He accepts no responsibility for the vagarious remarks they would have had him say and which they would like to criticize. The views expressed in the address, because of which all the dust arose, have not been changed, and the action that was suggested in that address will be taken if the circumstances suggested therein should arise and seem to make it necessary. Meanwhile the department will not be "bluffed" by those who wish it to err into action which would have for the sole basis of its existence the hope of some that it might make a mistake. It is, however, extremely interesting to note how threats of reducing wages because of tariff changes have been few of late. It reminds me of those fine lines from an old Irish song of the Civil War, which run:

Speechless silence all around
Is every sound I hear.

The fact that powers exist in hands that will use them if, and only if, general and sufficient cause shall appear for such use, and will then use them conservatively and considerately, if at all, seems to have had a sobering effect upon those who would make the wages of the laborer a fulcrum on which to poise their political arguments. Meanwhile an inquiry under these powers has gone steadily on into conditions in the pottery industry. The domestic field work will take perhaps two months longer, and it is soon expected to begin the European side of the field work. All sorts of yarns have been printed about this inquiry. It was intended to affect the tariff bill, which was not true. It was a sign of fear lest a mistake was made, which was not true, either. It was an attempt to coerce, which was still less true. It was all sorts of things except the thing it was, namely, a thoughtful, patient, painstaking inquiry into the truth, with a desire to help everybody and hurt nobody, for truth does harm only to the evildoer. Candid men of all political faiths are not afraid of truth, least of all good business men, and those who have gone from our department into the field into this inquiry have met a considerate, courteous, and frank spirit of good will. There are not wanting those who have frankly thanked us for what they are kind enough to call an effort to be of service to them. What the report will be as a result of this inquiry I do not know. It will be impartial, for many different views have been represented among the inspectors. It will be clear and candid and will not have for its purpose any effort to influence legislation one way or another. Our belief is that it will be helpful all around, and certainly the intention to have it so is very deep within our purposes.

It is possible that other inquiries of a similar kind may be taken up hereafter. If so, it will be done in the spirit that respects and welcomes all truth and which will try with a proper catholicity to serve the industries themselves, the people who are employed in them, and the people who buy from them.

Another line of inquiry of a very different kind is proposed for which in our estimates for the coming fiscal year the sum of $100,000 has been included. Let me quote the exact language of our application for certain funds that are asked on behalf of the Bureau of Standards of our department. They are wanted "for an investigation of the standards and methods of measurements and for determination of the quality and cost of service required in the regulation by States and cities of public utilities, being such as the electric light and power companies, city and interurban railway companies, telephone companies, gas companies, water companies, and every public-utility company, and for furnishing technical data and expert advice to State and city officials upon request in connection with the regulation or operation of public utilities or of the fulfillment of municipal contracts for street lighting, water, gas, or electric power, etc."

This fund would be used to enable the Bureau of Standards to carry on such investigations as would fix standards of service for public-utility companies that would assist the public-service commissioners of the States and cities and other authorities in regulation and control of these utilities. There is no hint here of the Government infringing upon the authority of any State or city when through its Bureau of Standards it proposes to cooperate with and assist State commissions in their technical work. There is no suggestion or idea that in this connection the Bureau of Standards would exercise any legal authority whatever; no more so than it does in its other scientific standardizing work.

There is, however, a wide field for the activities of this scientific bureau in carrying on and publishing investigations of a purely technical character for the purpose of establishing standards and methods that may be adopted generally by State and municipal commissions. Uniformity of process and of requirement is greatly needed, and without some coordinating agency which is impartial and disinterested it is hard, if not impracticable, to secure such uniformity. Two parties, one a city or a State, the other a public-service company, may disagree. Who is to be the arbitrator? You say the court, but the question is a technical one, and upon what standard of technical knowledge and inquiry will the court base its action?

In drawing specifications and stating requirements to which a utility company is expected to be held it is essential that there should be some definite standard not determined by an arbitrary fiat of one engineer or anyone interested, but based upon laws learned by study and upon the impartial activities of a body which has no possible connection with the particular case, but is charged instead with the sole duty of determining the precise facts and passing upon these standard requirements. The Bureau of Standards can not formulate satisfactory rules that would be accepted as standards without consulting with the public-service commissioners and with utility companies all over the land, in order to become familiar with the conditions and requirements in different sections and to ascertain the views of the various parties interested.

A considerable force of people and experienced engineers and experts will be required and funds will be necessary for them to travel and to make their scientific inquiries. The cost, because of the splendid equipment and organization that the Bureau of Standards has already, will be far less than if each State or city were to attempt to do this work. That would mean creating for that purpose in each State or city a costly plant, which would duplicate that now in use by us.

It is of the greatest importance that all State and municipal commissions should possess full technical information in regard to utilities which they are required to regulate in order that they may act intelligently and justly as between utilities companies and the public. If the public is to have a square deal, there must be just as good information in the hands of the public-service commissions as there is in the hands of the public-service companies. The latter can and do pay high prices for the best-trained minds. The public-service commissions frequently are unable to do this, yet these latter are charged with regulating the former, and unless they are as well informed that regulation will be more apparent than real.

It was found, for example, in one city that gas was being furnished far below the legal requirements merely because the best technical information had not been available to the public authorities. Serious errors in another case have been made in drawing requirements for street railways merely because the public authorities had not the knowledge at hand requisite for the purposes.

In two important cities to-day officers of the Bureau of Standards are being consulted by the municipal authorities determining the precise facts on which a firm and fair regulation shall be based. The public-service commissions of at least six States and many cities have asked this cooperation.

The subject is one of importance which opens to thought the more it is studied the vision of great possibilities which, indeed, in their results will affect the daily life of the humblest man, but whose inception is based upon the most profound scientific study and upon the use of the best technical apparatus.

I wonder, as I think of this great work, if some sapient mind with versatile powers will arise to say something about our intruding somewhere, or something as to grasping at the affairs of States and cities. If such there be, their mental case is hopeless. It is useless to attempt to standardize such minds.

Nothing can measure their movements or weigh what it is that passes with them as intellectual process.

Lest in the midst of this technical subject the fact is not clear in your minds, let me say again that these inquiries into the fundamental laws which underlie all the work of serving you by public-utilities companies will be so carried on that their results will be available on request of those who need them and not in the least because it is intended or will be permitted that they shall replace or modify any of the normal functions of State or municipal bodies. Mention of this single branch of the work of the great Bureau of Standards reminds us that they are also studying certain other matters which affect all of us directly; for example, into the causes of broken rails and of broken wheels and car axles. I need not tell you that from these three kinds of accidents much damage is wrought to property and many lives have been lost. The Interstate Commerce Commission has welcomed the cooperation of the Bureau of Standards of our department in studying patiently into the fundamental reasons that underlie these failures, in order that when the causes are once learned we may lay down standard methods whereby we can avoid this loss hereafter.

A SUMMARY OF THE REMARKS OF HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, SECRETARY OF COMMERCE, BEFORE THE LANSING BOARD OF COMMERCE, OCTOBER 23, 1913.

After speaking of the general work of the Department of Commerce, with its 8,000 men, engaged in many different lines of activity all over the world, of which number but 1,500 are employed in Washington, the Secretary went rather more into detail respecting the urgent and important work of protecting the coast of Alaska, which duty is charged upon the Coast and Geodetic Survey, which is one of the bureaus of the Department of Commerce, Mr. Redfield said:

"The recent sad accidents on the Alaskan coast, particularly that to the State of California, which in last August sank in a very few minutes after striking an unknown rock, carrying to the bottom most of her passengers and crew, have enforced the necessity for protecting these dangerous coasts as fully and rapidly as possible. The task is no easy one, for there are many thousand miles of dangerous coast to be watched, with numerous inlets and islands, and a large force is needed, and a good deal of money, in order to make them as safe as they ought to be. Yet, until such safety is secured the commercial development of Alaska can not reach its normal height, for we have no means of reaching that great territory save by water, and can never have any means of reaching it directly from our own shores except by sea. The problem is not only that of surveying the enormous coast line and of sounding the bottom of the sea and preparing the necessary charts for navigators, but it is also that of establishing and maintaining the lights and other aids to navigation which are requisite for security. Already six vessels are employed by the Coast Survey in this service and two by the Lighthouse Bureau. The former will ask for six additional ships, in the estimates which have just been prepared, and the Lighthouse Service is asking for one large steamer to provide transportation facilities for its supplies, as well as doing necessary tender work in heavy weather.

"A part of this Alaska problem is the caring for the seal herds on the Pribilof Islands in the Bering Sea. The present law provides for a closed season of five years, during which only such seals shall be killed as are necessary to provide meat for the islanders. This number is limited to 3,000 per year. A census of the herd taken this last summer shows that the first year of the closed season has resulted in a fair increase of the number of seals, and it seems reasonably certain that the result of the full closed period will be a restoration of this invaluable asset to a position where it may be drawn upon from year to year in moderation while still permitting its steady growth.

"In this connection a new departure has been made in having the skins sold in the fur market in St. Louis instead of, as heretofore, in London. The auction of the skins for Government account will take place in December, and the department is awaiting the result of the experiment with much interest.

"Another very different line of the department's activity is an inquiry that will be made, if funds are provided, into the question of the fixing of retail prices by manufacturers. The Supreme Court has decided that such fixing of prices is now unlawful, and there is of course no thought, much less purpose, of in any way questioning the decision. It is the law of the land, and as such bound in letter and spirit to be accepted and obeyed. For the guidance, however, of future legislation on this important subject, it is desirable that the economic question be worked out. Is it or is it not the fact that when competitive conditions exist the fixing of retail prices by a manufacturer tends to monopoly? If, for example, a patent jew's-harp is sold at $5, the price being fixed at that figure by the manufacturer, does the fact that the price on that article is so fixed act to cause monopoly so long as conditions exist which permit other patent jew's-harps to be sold at the same or differing prices? As a matter of fact, is it or is it not a temptation to a man who can make a good jew's-harp which he can sell at $4 to proceed to do so and does it, or does it not tempt another man who can make a jew's-harp which he can sell for $1 to try to make it for that figure?

"The question is a practical one, not to be determined by surmise or upon the hasty jumping at conclusions from any single circumstance. There is doubtless much to be said on both sides, and the matter is too complex to be solved at a glance. The decision of the Supreme Court settles the present law, but the wisdom or unwisdom of a new law and the economic profit or loss of the practice are not yet settled. There are men who are sincere foes of monopoly who incline to the belief that under economic laws, which are greater than any statutes, the broad prohibition of the right to fix retail prices by the manufacturer tends itself to create monopoly instead of being a movement toward relief from such monopoly.

"The subject is one that concerns us all. There is no one here that has not in his possession some patented article which is affected by this ruling. Our retail stores abound with them. A very keen feeling exists among the manufacturers of such articles, and unless I am incorrectly informed, there has been a very keen competition among such manufacturers in many lines. We deem it well, therefore, that the Bureau of Corporations should devote some time and money during the coming years to a careful study into this important business problem."

SUMMARY OF REMARKS OF HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, SECRETARY OF COMMERCE, BEFORE THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF OMAHA, OCTOBER 28, 1913.

After briefly describing the work of the Department of Commerce, which he said covered the realms of the air, the earth, and the water, through the Radio Service, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Bureau of Fisheries, Mr. Redfield said:

"The attitude of the Department of Commerce toward the business world of to-day may be defined in two words. It is an affirmation and an inquiry. It has undertaken, subject to the approval of Congress and based upon funds which Congress will be asked to appropriate, to carry out these two ideas, the affirmation and the inquiry into fact. It bases its affirmative policy on a strong belief in the character and quality of American business men and in the efficiency of American labor and of American organization. The department knows very well that many of our industries are not efficient, that some capital is held back from its legitimate fruitage because of its own fears and by lack of confidence in its own power to compete in the world's markets. It is recognized that in some places labor may still not fully realize that its richest reward lies in the largest possible output when due and searching regard is paid to such hours and such speed as will not overstrain or poison through fatigue. We know that much of our industrial movement is still hampered by inefficiency, not the less real because it is unconscious. Nevertheless, though these things are true, we do believe strongly and increasingly in the power of our American industries, when they shall have surely found themselves, to compete with the industries of any country in the world while fully maintaining on the one hand the American standard of wages and on the other hand reducing the cost of production. The gospel in which I believe, then, is an affirmative one, a gospel of courage and of hope, not a rash or hasty self-confidence, but a fearlessness based upon a calm estimate of our own power, and which takes all the facts, not merely a part of them, into account.

"Based on this belief, the Department of Commerce wishes to initiate a new step toward the expansion of American business abroad. It desires to place in each of 14 great capitals a commercial attaché, accredited to our legation there but under the charge of the Department of Commerce. This officer will have for his sole duty the study of commerce and industries of the country in which he resides and will be expected to collaborate with the consuls in the various local centers in that country in so doing. The great industrial nations in Europe maintain such forces and have them here among us, but we have never had sufficient confidence in ourselves to establish such an organization. The duties of the consul under the prospective plan will remain unchanged save that he is expected to report on commercial subjects direct to the Department of Commerce. We then propose to enlarge a force already existing on a small scale, called commercial agents. These are men who take a single subject and study it in various countries under all its aspects. There are a few of these now, somewhere from 12 to 16 men. We hope to double this force. The proposed organization would then consist of three parts:

"1. The general view of a country's commerce and industry represented by the commercial attaché located at its capital.

"2. The particular or local view of the country's interest in commerce taken by the consuls.

"The above two will work in cooperation.

"3. The special view of definite subjects through the commercial agents, who will travel from land to land in pursuit of their particular object.

"The results of all these three cooperating forces will be made public through the daily publication of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and through special reports. It is, however, expected that the commercial agents on their return home from their special trips will travel through this country at the request of boards of commerce and commercial clubs to explain to them, face to face, what they have seen and learned abroad, and that the commercial attachés when given leaves of absence shall likewise be free to place before representative bodies of business men the facts respecting the countries in which they have resided. By these several means it is hoped to put the entire industrial world in our country in position to get accurate and first-hand information concerning the industries and commerce of other lands.

"That this is no mere dream is evident from the fact that we are to-day exporting our manufactures to the extent of $1,500,000,000 in value yearly. This is a vast sum, and places us third in rank of the nations which export manufactures, England and Germany alone exceeding us. But it is perhaps even more remarkable that this foreign trade in manufactures is expanding very rapidly. Each successful month marks an advance. It grew through the fiscal year ending June 30 at the average rate of $500,000 a working day, and since July 1 has maintained or even increased that growth. We deal, then, not with a fancy or with a hope which we wish to come true but with an established fact.

"On its inquiry side the department hopes Congress will furnish funds to take up three matters of importance:

"1. An inquiry into the laws of production underlying our trust problem.

"2. An inquiry into the maintaining of fixed prices.

"3. An inquiry into the technical facts underlying the work of public-service corporations.

"First among these is the inquiry now proposed as to whether the trust form of organization is necessarily and in its essence industrially efficient. It is clearly recognized that large capital is essential to the cheapest production, and that this mass of capital permits research and other industrial developments that are requisite to producing at low cost and which otherwise could not be had without it. In other words, the massing of capital and of labor has undoubtedly points of great economic advantage. The question is whether these have not also their economic limits; whether there is not a law of maximum production at minimum cost beyond which lies a realm in which, if production is pushed too far, cost increases. The department does not dogmatize upon this matter. It looks at it as a subject of inquiry. There is some reason to believe that the aggregations of capital in industry have in some instances been pushed further than is economically sound, and that the gains to be made from such aggregations are more superficial and temporary than essential and permanent. The history of our trusts shows that they are far from having been universally successful. And the briefest glance at our industries also shows that many concerns of relatively small size are quite as successful, or more so, than those great aggregations which fill the public eye. Does or does not efficiency depend on bulk? That is the question which it is very important to answer. Do bigness and economy go necessarily together? It would seem apparent that if this matter can be worked out patiently and thoroughly—it can not be done in two or three months—so that the underlying laws of production can be made clear, we may come to a normal and natural settlement of the trust problem. I myself am inclined to think that in its extreme forms the so-called trust is a passing industrial phase.

"Secondly, since the Supreme Court has decided that the fixing of prices is unlawful, it is not our desire or purpose to question existing law. So far as I know, however, the economic law concerning the fixing of retail prices has never had thoughtful study. If there is ever to be new legislation on this subject, it ought to be based on accurate knowledge. Indeed, I hope it may be clear that what we are trying in the Department of Commerce to do is to substitute thorough knowledge for uninformed attempts at prevention or cure. Supposing—and always supposing—competitive conditions to exist, does the fixing of retail prices by manufacturers mean monopoly or tend strongly to it? Some of those most strongly hostile to monopoly in all its forms think it does not so tend. I express no opinion, but I think we ought to find out. Some have said that the present condition whereby prices can not be fixed is one which in its very nature tends most strongly toward monopoly, in that the survivor in what may become 'cutthroat' competition might have the field left practically to himself. It is remembered also that in countries abroad the maintaining of fixed retail prices is welcomed by the law. The only point I now make is that we would like to find out what is right and what is wrong on this subject, rather than have our legislation deal unjustly with it through a belief, however sincere, which may not be founded upon accurate knowledge.

"We believe it to be essential that the public-service commissions of State and city should have at their disposal at least as thorough information as is in the possession of the public-service companies they must regulate. This is not so to-day. The corporate servants of our municipalities and States can and do employ the best legal and technical talent, and in both respects those who would regulate are at a disadvantage with those whom they must regulate. Through the laboratories, therefore, of the Bureau of Standards we purpose to inquire, if funds are granted by Congress, into the underlying facts beneath our public utilities—facts as to gas, as to electrolysis, and other similar matters. Already six States and many cities have called upon the Bureau of Standards for this advice. The knowledge can not be had by each city or State for itself, since that would involve the establishment of independent laboratories at great cost for construction and maintenance, and when these were done the results would not be binding in one State as regards another. The results of an inquiry by the Bureau of Standards, however, are of accepted value, not only throughout this land but abroad. Furthermore, the Bureau of Standards is free from political, financial, or local bias. It seeks only the truth. No element of profit enters into their studies. Again, it seeks this truth solely for public uses and puts it at the service of all. The greatest public-service corporation and the smallest city, or even the individual engineer officer of any city, can have full access to the truth."

SUMMARY OF ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, SECRETARY OF COMMERCE, BEFORE THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF ST. LOUIS, NOVEMBER 1, 1913, ON THE IDEALS OF COMMERCE.

I am led to add to the remarks I expected to make by seeing in your local press extracts from the recent address of the Commissioner of Corporations on the subject of the intended future policy of that bureau. I feel it to be very important that the business men of the country should understand the purpose of certain work we are about to undertake, with the approval of the President, provided always that Congress supplies the necessary funds. I need not tell this audience what has been done by law and through the courts in dealing with the so-called trust problem. It seems to me, however, that the fundamental factor underlying the whole subject of big business and of the trusts has been largely lost to sight. We propose, if Congress permits, to undertake an inquiry into the fundamental economic laws which underlie the vast masses of capital and labor, with which we are becoming familiar in our industries, and control them, and which are more powerful and certain in their action than any statute law can be.

Is or is not the trust form of organization industrially efficient? Are there or are there not factors which come into play when production passes a certain point which increase rather than diminish cost? Is there, in other words, a law of maximum production at minimum cost, beyond which point of maximum production cost rises? Is the trust problem in its economic essence a passing phase? Some years ago one of the leading lawyers of New York said to me that the trust problem carried in it the seeds of its own decay because men could not always be found able to continuously manage such great masses of capital and labor. If we may take an analogy from the armies of war, it will be found that while subordinate officers are numerous and readily and easily obtained, great commanders are few, and you can count on your fingers those who have made conspicuous successes in the handling of the greatest of armies. If we look at the field of our greatest industries, we shall find certain facts to make us reflect. Some of the trusts have ceased to exist. The Wall Paper Trust is one, the Cordage Trust is another, and there are others. Many of the so-called trusts are not especially profitable, failing to earn dividends or earning but small dividends upon their common stock. It is the few among them that have been conspicuous financial successes, not the average or the many; leaving out of account altogether those with whom the law has dealt, it would not seem from a superficial glance at the record that this particular type of organization had justified itself commercially. Of course, it is true that large capital does permit expenditures for research, apparatus, and equipment which could not otherwise be had, and that it permits the employment of experts who without great means could not be secured. Yet it is also true that side by side with the great aggregations of capital have gone on smaller and independent concerns in the same lines of business who have made, in some instances, conspicuous successes. You have only to look at the steel industry and the typewriter industry to find examples, and there are a great many more. Indeed, I think it may be found to be a fact that some of the independent concerns are more profitable than are the larger ones that bulk so greatly in the public eye. What are the economic laws that lie beneath this movement? This is what we want to learn. If it shall appear by searching and conservative inquiry that the public dread of these aggregations is but the unconscious outcome of an economic law which itself fails to justify them, then the matter will be finally settled, for men will no longer continue that which is proven economically unsound. I do not dogmatize upon the question. On the contrary, my statement is that the answer to it is as yet unknown. There are wise and experienced men who think differently on it, but certainly it is true that we ought not to go further in our legislative and executive life without learning as thoroughly as we may what the fundamental truth is.

To many a foreign observer an American city like yours must have a peculiar interest. I do not mean so much in its extent, or in the actual wealth accumulated, in its public works, its private buildings, or even in its population, as in the mature and established character of all that appears. The European or Asiatic visitor has usually behind him an historic background of centuries, the results of which are naturally compared in his thought with what we have done in our decades. Many of the great cities which he knows run back even into Roman days. Some of them were capitals long before the New World was found. There are, of course, such exceptions as Berlin and St. Petersburg; but even these cities are centers of powers that were strong before the United States was born, so that there also certain traditions of age exist. Coming from such a background into America, and into what, compared with the Atlantic seaboard, is in a sense a younger part of America, it does often surprise a foreign observer to find you all "grown up." The city of St. Louis as a municipal organization is but little over 90 years old. It is but a hundred and five years since it was incorporated as a town. These are short periods in the lives of great capitals. And yet how complete and how grown up you are.

It was five years after you became a city that my grandfather prepared a map, which I have, outlining a great railway which should reach from New York to the Mississippi River. And when he did this, most men who knew it derided him and called him a visionary. I have in my office an advertisement of a steamboat company which came into existence in 1825, two years after St. Louis, as a city, was born, in which, it was said, that in order to avoid the dangers incident to travel on steamboats a safety barge would be towed behind the steamer. In this barge the passengers traveled in security from the frequent explosions which ornamented the marine records of the time. It was a good while thereafter that, as I am told, an officer of the Pennsylvania Railroad was kicked uphill because, in saying that the net earnings of that company might, he thought, within five years more rise to the extreme total of $8,000,000 in a year, he was thought to have so lost his balance of judgment as to be unsafe in the practical office that he had formerly held. My father remembered the wooden bridge by which Broadway crossed Canal Street, in New York, and my uncle recalled living on the east side of Manhattan Island and looking, as a boy, across the East River to the wooden blockhouse that stood where now are the towers of the Williamsburg Bridge.

So we and our fathers have rather quickly done a vast work, and it looks so solid and so substantial that we often forget that we are a child yet, as nations go. It is to be hoped the span of our national life and growth will be so long as to put us now in what, reckoned by years at least, is but our infancy.

What made this growth? What has been behind it all? In the first place, men had certain ideas about things which they could not develop as well as they wished to do in their old homes. Some had an idea about religion which they wanted to work out, and they came over to New England to try to do so. Some had certain ideas of profit, and came over here to see what they could do in that direction, and others were under stress from poverty, which they thought they could avoid in the New World. After a time there came an idea of self-dependence and of mutual interest, which led to independence and then the working out of our own ideas in National and State and municipal matters. There was at first the struggle for bread and clothing in a strange land, and from that came the infant development of industry, and as another step the establishment of freedom of trade and exchange over the greatest area of that kind in the world; and again the idea that we might feed the nations with our surplus food, and for long we did so; and then, slowly and much later, the idea that we might sell to the other peoples things we made which they want, and we have begun this. And the idea is expanding, until now we are not only the greatest producers in the world of many things that men need in other lands, but, youngest of the nations, we are first in domestic trade and third in international commerce. To-day we ship abroad into the open arena of the world's commerce an average of $5,000,000 worth daily of our manufactured goods. The wealth and products of 48 States flow freely through the arteries of our domestic trade, and the manufactures of our united nationality are a potent factor in the world's commercial centers.

Along with this growth in material things has continued the evolution of ideas of which we have briefly spoken. There are thoughts abroad in the land which have not always been here. The time in which the getting of profits was the supreme ideal has been succeeded by a time in which the giving of service is thought to be the true ideal. You have seen, for example, the springing into life of commissions which say to our great public-service companies, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther," which tell them plainly that both their existence and their profit depend upon serving well the public from whom they derive their powers; which tell them, indeed, that this ideal of service goes so far that they must take the lean with the fat, and may not make the ideal of profit a controlling factor in every detail of their respective enterprises. The voice of the public is heard in every great city and in most of our States and in the Capital of the Nation saying to the great aggregations of capital and labor known as public-service corporations: "You must be what your name implies—public-service companies—and the service you render must be first to the public and secondarily to yourselves, and the serving of the public well and safely and on an improving scale is of greater importance than the increase of profits, and must be given as the very basis of any profit." Indeed, the public thought now clearly is that these companies have no basis for existence save as they are true servants of the public. Many men urge that this kind of work is so essentially public service that the public alone should do it free from all private interest.

It is interesting to note how practical a fact this feeling in the public mind is. I have heard of a great public-service company whose idea seemed for years to be to give as little as it could for the most return, to avoid every obligation from which it could possibly be excused, and to retain skillful counsel to minimize its obligations to the people from whom its charter came. It became substantially derelict in many if not most of the duties it owed to the people, from serving whom it alone derived its existence. Public wrath grew against that company until there were none so poor to do it reverence; and this feeling made itself felt in many serious ways. The company's treasury suffered and juries reflected the just popular indignation. As years went on a normal reaction from this low estate brought into power men of larger views and broader conceptions of public service. Methods were changed. Effort was made to provide the most for the people in quality and quantity first; to originate forms of service, even, rather than resist them. As the new spirit became known the public temper changed, and the company began to prosper. The new spirit grew; earnings grew with it, until now the bitterness is gone and peace and prosperity reign. Here was a new ideal, and a new life came with it. I know an apartment hotel whose manager seems to have the odd notion that he is the servant of his tenants. Many a close-fisted landlord might envy his success.

There are many more of these ideals afloat. One of them says that so to manage a business for profit's sake as to injure the men and the women employed by it is to destroy the most valuable possession we have, and that an enterprise so run is a public wrong, not to be long permitted. Hence this ideal says hours shall be shortened, and perhaps even a minimum wage shall be paid; for it is just as true to-day as it was in Canaan of old, that the Lord saith, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox which treadeth out the corn." Nervous exhaustion and brain fag are not confined to so-called "high society." Fatigue is no respecter of persons. Disease knows little of social or economic distinctions. Pain is entirely democratic in its scope.

Few men will deny that the ideals of one time form the practice of the next, and that our whole history, whether on the commercial, the material, or the political side, has been the gradual working out into fact of the ideals of the days before. It was a great ideal that there is no property right in man; and slavery fell before it. It was a great ideal that the spoils system is morally wrong and politically unsound; and no party could exist that avowed that system as its own, for the public wrath would crush it. An ideal greatly needed in the public criticism of to-day is that it shall be based upon unperverted and accurate statements of fact.

What, then, are the ideals of to-day in commerce? For if we can find them, we may with reasonable security say that they will form the practice of our successors in commerce.

There was an old commercial ideal wrought into law, which law still has a measure of respect from its antiquity, though hardly from its respectability. This ideal was centered in the old law-Latin phrase caveat emptor, which, being interpreted, is "Let the buyer look out." Look at this commercial ideal a little and see how disreputable it has become. Apply it to food and straightway rises up the public conscience in the shape of a pure-food law and says, "Thou shalt not." Apply it to patent medicines and brave publications rise up to denounce those who sell what may deceive or injure. There is coming into being a new law of fair trade, which begins rather plainly to say that the seller has grave responsibilities, and that it is his business to watch out lest he deceive the buyer. We are beginning to substitute another business practice that might almost be called the rule of "caveat vendor." There is a growing conception of honor in such matters; men will carefully buy of houses whose name they think is a trustworthy guaranty of quality. Once the representative of a great manufacturer said to me, "Any goods that bear our firm name are all right." But he sold lots of goods on which the firm name was not put. There was an ideal half baked reminding one of the man who said he had his principles but did not always carry them with him. There are lines of business now in which it is honorably recognized that the seller must be supremely careful lest he be condemned. Among such take, for example, the exceptional care and skill put into the selection of materials for and the design and the manufacture of a modern automobile. When you look at our entire commercial field it is surprising to see how far the old doctrine of caveat emptor, however much it may survive in discussions of law, has fallen into the background of our commercial life, and the seller is beginning to recognize that a large part of the responsibility rests with him. A rising and increasingly definite social consciousness says to manufacturers, "Thou shalt not deceive, whether by name or by label or appearance or composition or advertisement. We, the buyers, mean that you at the source shall look out for us."

See how far this idea will go naturally into definite practice among yourselves to-morrow. Your wife will buy for your table the product of the manufacturer whom she believes recognizes the principle that the seller must take care. You yourself will buy your clothing from the tailor whom you believe puts the most honor into his work; who, in short, serves you best. You will deal with the physician who puts the most and not the least of himself into his professional work. The lawyer will hold and control the best practice longest who gives the most in value and service for what he gets; and the man, whether he be physician or lawyer or minister in professional life, who does not feel that as a seller of his services it is his privilege to give the most he can will have short shrift among you. One great product has standing among us, because being called "the best" it is so esteemed to be. That producer has felt the responsibility on the seller. Advantage is taken by sellers, both rightly and wrongly, of this thought. Men of broad vision, who grasp the truth, put their conscience into their goods knowing it pays. Men of narrow vision will try to persuade over the bargain counter that they are serving the consumer by giving him a dollar's worth for 50 cents.

There is another ideal coming into life and power, slowly but surely. If it were incarnate here in St. Louis, it would say to you: "These massive buildings, these great banks, these beautiful homes, these instrumentalities of culture and of wealth, these libraries, these factories—these are not St. Louis. These are but the outward expression, in brick and stone, of a portion of St. Louis. The real city is the men and the women and the children who live there, and of that real city the poor and the humble are as truly a part as—sometimes more truly a part than—the cultured and the well-to-do." The ideal of which I am thinking would say, were it incarnate: "The pride of a city does not lie in its public buildings and its great institutions, but in its humble homes." If behind the outward pomp and power are alleys of filth and dark rooms of misery, this ideal says the pomp and power are but shams; that we have an ill-balanced thing, not a rounded human entity, but an abnormality, with wealth and comfort on one side and for some, and with pain and poverty on the other side and for many. Men get hold of this ideal that the greatness of a city or State lies in the peace and happiness of all its people, not of a part of them. Men get hold, I say, of this ideal and distort it in all sorts of ways and get violent about it, forgetting that any evolution up to an ideal means time and growth and patience; that we must advance step by step; that all the combined wisdom of a city and its wealth, too, together, could not and should not attempt to do away with poverty and misery and sin at a single blow. One of our ideals must be patience as well as persistence.

How does the matter of which I am speaking affect commerce? About this way: That it is doubtful how long it will be respectable to have large dividends and low wages go on together; that it is uncertain how soon public opinion will say that a wage for working women in a shop or in a factory which is insufficient to maintain them in decency shall go on side by side with a costly home for the owner of that business, and perhaps even with gifts on his part to charities and education. I say it is uncertain as to when these things will take place, for in my mind it is not uncertain as to whether they will take place. For the ideal that men can rightly profit out of conditions under which their fellows wrongly live will not last. It has already begun to fade. In its place comes another; it comes slowly, but it is coming; and this newcomer among the ideals says that it does not pay any longer either to let the buyer do the looking out for himself wholly, or to let the laborer shift for himself in poverty wholly, or to try to extract from human endurance the utmost that fatigue can give, or even to go about indifferently and talk sagely about the market rate of wages and normal living conditions for the uneducated. No; there is an ideal which says that it pays in money to so manage that the worker in the mill and in the shop shall have enough recompense to enable him or her to live in decency. This ideal, I repeat, says it pays, and men in some places are beginning to find it out in practice. This ideal says, too, that no economic law can be right which works moral wrongs; that there are not two sides of truth—one good truth and one bad one—but that all truth is good and all truth is the same, and there is not one kind of truth for the employer and another kind of truth for the worker. This ideal would shrewdly inquire whether the losses in industry, seen and unseen, from doing what is called "hard-headed business" at the market rate, might not have been profitably saved by a little more thought of the common facts of human life and a little less interest in the additions of the pay roll.

This same ideal some day will stand at the elbow of a man and say to him: "You are selling goods in Europe against the competition of Europe, though your employees get more pay and live better than they do over yonder. Why not carry it a step further—try to see how well you can let your workmen live, and your workwomen; how far you can carry the idea of cultivating them? Perhaps you will find a responsiveness that will surprise you. They are not dull and inert material; they are not even like lathes or planers, that get their power from without. They are self-animated. Perhaps if they work themselves willingly, rather than by force of poverty or need, there might be something there that would be useful both to you and them. Why not try?"

So, gentlemen of the Commercial Club, I see, or think I see, in the unrest of the day, even in the cruder and baser forms of that unrest, the cropping out, often in rough shape, of new commercial ideals, which the wise heed and the foolish contemn, but which have in them the basis of a permanence and a power for our industry and commerce that no arithmetician can figure out and no logician can argue. For who shall measure the spirit of man by numbers or by reason? It must be remembered that we can not treat men arithmetically. You need but to look into your own homes to see that. One of your children has an artistic bent; another is determined upon medicine; a third has the mechanical gift. They have not the same values in the same place. Each has his greatest value in his fit place. If you took the one having the mechanical gift and put him in his proper sphere, you would not have two like him if you added the one with the artistic gift beside him. Reckoning as mechanics, you would not have two, but one. If the matter were reversed, you would not have two artists, but one artist and one mechanic. We have too much measured men in our commerce and industry by mere arithmetic. Take them as they stand at their benches in the shop. Are we not a good deal prone to reckon them as so many hands and forget the difference in minds? A psychologist who knew his job would laugh at our classification of men by numbers and, taking the standard of a mechanic as his basis, would say to you: "Out of your 500 men you have 200 mechanics, and perhaps 200 part mechanics, and 100 who are not mechanics at all." Yet they are but men to many a thoughtless manager. Some day an ideal will spring up which will say to you: "Why do you regard the hands of your men only? Why not think about their heads? Perhaps when we study the minds of men as carefully as we study the tools we put in their hands some difficulties will cease to trouble us." It is strange to me that as a practical people we should so long have gone on by rule of thumb and be but just beginning to look at the actual human facts. But the night is going, and in time we shall come to the day when our children shall all be trained to do some one thing well, which day may God bring quickly; then we shall employ men not at the lowest figure that their untrained circumstances require them to take, but at a compensation based upon what they actually know how to do and at work fitted for their mental equipment, and shall thus apply to human beings the same ordinary laws of common sense which we now use when we make loans or buy tools or purchase clothing; that is, we shall employ with due regard to the quality of the person employed.

Just a final word. I speak of these things as an evolution, and never as a revolution. It seems to be a law of nature that the plants and animals that have the longest infancy live the longest lives, and we shall not gain by trying extravagantly to accelerate the working out even of the highest ideals. The wisest course seems to be to keep our minds open even to truth which is strange; to remember that to say "I do not believe it" is at once the height of dogmatism and the most unscientific of attitudes; and having open minds and willingness to obey the truth when we find it and to the extent that we see it, to grow and not to lie supine. In that growing we shall come at last into a fruition which shall be profitable and pleasant alike to us and to those who have the good fortune to be in our service.

OF

HON. RICHARD BARTHOLDT,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1913.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by Charles Fletcher Dole, which appears in the Boston Herald of Saturday, November 8, 1913.

The article is as follows:

PROTECTING OUR CITIZENS ABROAD.

How far ought a government to go in its efforts to protect the life and property of its citizens who undertake enterprises in backward or half-civilized countries? This question has never been authoritatively answered. Upon the nature of the answer to it hang the most delicate and tremendous issues affecting the peace of the world. This is now the fundamental question as regards the policy of the United States in the treatment of Mexico.

Perhaps the first answer that occurs to anyone who has never carefully considered the question is that the national flag ought to be made to protect all citizens everywhere. This has sometimes been hinted, at least in public addresses, by high officials of our Government. No one, however, has ever had any authority to say this. No vote of Congress, passed after a full and adequate discussion and in clear view of the momentous character of the subject, has ever established the policy of an administration. Much less has there ever been an appeal to the judgment of the American people to determine what they hold the answer to this great question should be. Is there any guiding principle here to mark the limit between hasty and thoughtless popular impulse and wise, humane, and civilized action?

There is just one principle which throws light upon the duty of a nation upon the subject of the care of its people who live or do business in foreign countries. Mr. Roosevelt has distinctly laid down the rule that nations ought to be governed in their conduct to each other by the same principle which should govern individuals, namely, what we call "the golden rule." Possibly Mr. Roosevelt has not altogether thought out how far-reaching this principle is.

Let us grapple frankly, now, with the situation in Mexico and see where our duty—in other words, where humanity—will carry us. As soon as we begin to put ourselves in our neighbor's place it becomes evident that the slightest tone of official arrogance and superiority on the part of the Government of the United States or the attitude of offering a threat must create extra nervous tension and irritability among the Mexican people and actually render the conditions more perilous for our nationals, whereas the attitude of patience and sympathy and the evident will on our part to repose trust in the good faith of the Mexicans will tend to strengthen the hands of the friends of order and to dispose the people kindly toward American residents. We must never forget that Mexico has no special reason for loving the nation which contrived to possess itself of half of her territory.

But suppose the worst, namely, that Americans were to lose their lives in the more disturbed parts of Mexico and that the Mexican Government was unable to afford immediate reparation, what ought the Government of the United States to do with reference to the welfare of both nations? Because 100 or 500 Americans had lost their lives in taking risks of business enterprise in a country as subject to the peril of revolutions as it is subject to earthquakes, should the United States still further endanger the lives of the remaining Americans and prepare to kill innumerable quite innocent Mexicans and to sacrifice 100,000 young Americans in war? What good should we thus be doing? Put ourselves again in the time of crisis through which the United States passed in the Civil War and ask what would have been the only friendly attitude toward us on the part of England or Italy in case some of their nationals had lost their lives in the draft riots of that period. We should have expected them not to be impatient to punish us or to force reparation, but rather to have assumed that we should do justice when once we had got into calmer waters. The assumption that a nation will do justice, backed up by friendly diplomacy and patience—such is human nature—will be more effective in the end than a fleet of dreadnoughts.

There is a subtle and peculiar danger of meddlesomeness in our relations to the Latin-American peoples. We would never go to the verge of a ruinous war to protect the honor of our flag for the sake of American citizens who ventured into the Balkan States, or into Turkey or Persia, or who insisted on being protected wherever they might like to live in Russia. Everyone sees the folly of such a proposition. We respect the powers across the sea as if they were our equals. We live on diplomatic good terms with a monster of iniquity, if he happens to be Sultan of Turkey. But we are inclined to look upon the nations to the south of us as our political inferiors, or at best as children. We are disposed to set ideals for them which we do not yet live up to ourselves. We would like to enter in and help them manage their domestic economy, and collect their customs for them, and administer upon their debts, and establish ourselves as their protectors against European adventurers. Why will we not see that however kindly our motives are this conduct is as distinctly away from the line of the golden rule, or of what we would ever have tolerated ourselves, as if we were to approach these Spanish neighbors of ours at the point of the bayonet? Indeed, it is perhaps easier to be treated with enmity by those who deem us their equals than to be treated with haughty philanthropy by those who hold themselves above us.

The great question at issue before our Nation has only one answer. It is not the business of any nation to underwrite the safety of her citizens who take ventures in other countries. Let them go at their own risks and be so much the more on their good behavior. They may fairly expect such aid and comfort and advice as the agents and consuls of their own governments can give them. But they have no claim to be defended or, in the worst case, to be avenged by an invading army. They have no claim to governmental intervention by any show of force to safeguard or collect their debts, whether owed by individuals or by so-called government.

The United States, being fairly free of embarrassing traditions, has a grand opportunity at the present moment to establish this principle. Its clear establishment would promise the South and Central American Republics almost complete release from any concern about armed intervention from abroad. If they wanted to borrow money, they would have to learn to behave themselves honorably and not engage to pay usurious interest. If they wished to enjoy trade with other peoples, they would have to prove themselves worthy of sound commercial relations, as all other trading nations have slowly learned.

The principle that no government should go to war for the protection of individual citizens, but should depend in every doubtful case upon the urgency of patient diplomacy and the justice of its cause, immediately disposes of the alleged necessity of great armaments. If anyone asks further proof of the adequacy of this principle, it is to be found in the long story, sometimes of the failure and again of the sickening cost, of the efforts to compel justice and security of life and property by force of punishment and the use of military power. Civilization has slowly come in by virtue of the opposite principle. Respect men as men and they learn to respect us, not otherwise. Trust them as men and they learn to answer to our trust.

Finally, it may be that we shall some time work out a world system of international relations in which the good offices of all shall be brought to bear with such immediacy upon refractory or barbarous powers that no nation would be tempted to urge its superior strength upon such a situation as is now presented in Mexico. When this is the case, there will be the least need for the show of force, for the mandate or advice of a great disinterested family council of the nations would have the natural weight, like the decision of a supreme court, to enforce itself upon the conscience and judgment of the offending nation. Meanwhile, in the absence of any ultimate court of appeal, let history show us on every page what we ought to expect, namely, that no nation is ever good enough, or wise enough, or unselfish enough by itself to be a safe arbiter and judge, especially unasked and unwelcome, in the political affairs of its neighbors. Wherever we should have to march armies over the bodies of a resisting people let us know that we are marching apart from the ideals of civilization.

Party Caucus.

OF

HON. HARVEY B. FERGUSSON,

OF NEW MEXICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, November 11, 1913.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Speaker, the well-nigh universal condemnation in the public mind of the caucus and caucus methods must be admitted to exist in this country at the present moment.

It is an interesting subject of speculation why this is so. Surely not because of any innate vice in the caucus itself. Indeed, the caucus, in matters of legislation, may be said to be a necessary concomitant of a people's government. It has come to be an axiom that a people's government must be carried on by means of party—a party, in the political sense, being merely an aggregation of all those who believe in certain principles of government as necessary to be enforced to promote the welfare of our country and at the same time to preserve our free institutions from subtle decay and final destruction. It is equally obvious that for a large number of citizens and voters to act together for this noble and common purpose it is necessary for them to openly or tacitly agree to act together, and that can only be done by ascertaining and loyally abiding by the will of the majority of all those professing the party belief.

The only possible way to ascertain such will is by means of the party caucus, and the efficacy of the party is at once destroyed and the principles it was organized to promote are basely betrayed if less than the majority arrogate to themselves to thwart the general party policy. A complete, comprehensive, and notable change in our governmental methods was voted in the last election, and the Democratic Party is in control of the entire lawmaking machinery of our Government. More than 500 legislators have assembled, representing nearly a hundred million people dispersed over an immense extent of country, with every diversity of climate, occupation, industry, and local interest—in numerous ways selfish local interest in conflict in greater or less degree with the great nation-wide general interest or commission intrusted to the majority party to enforce. The individual members of the majority party, each and every one of them honor bound by his party platform and his expressed and implied pledge to carry out by his vote and action such principles, meet in caucus to adjust the real or fancied conflicts between the great general principles and local, special, and minor interests, to ascertain what may be reconciled and found consistent with the main purpose of the people and what must be ignored or made to give way to the greater general good. That is the legitimate, indeed the necessary, aim of the party caucus, so that the full strength of the majority party may be made effective to carry out the people's will as to overshadowing, nation-wide principles of government.

Who will say that in itself the party caucus is an evil thing? Who will say that in our great country the party caucus is not a necessary procedure in administering our system of government?

Yet it is an undeniable fact that at this moment the party caucus is held in utter detestation in the popular mind. And our antagonists across the aisle have dishonored the very walls of this historic Chamber by their hypocritical wailings over the Democratic caucuses of this Congress.

We, the Democratic majority, are quite willing to abide by that ancient rule as applied to the party caucus, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The same rule applied to Republican caucuses of the past will afford a most satisfying reason for the unusual opprobrium existing in this country touching the party caucus.

The people, in the last election, applied the rule "By their fruits ye shall know them." They saw manifest the results flowing from Republican use of the party caucus, and certainty was produced in the popular mind by the revolt of the progressive Republicans, men patriotic enough to break away from the evil practices of the special-interest Republicans and courageous enough to turn state's evidence and promote the welfare of the country by revealing the inside workings of the Republican caucus.

The people know that in the secrecy of the Republican caucus their Government was turned over to the special interests, to the "malefactors of great wealth," and that this great wrong was done by selfish and corrupt politicians in return for campaign contributions. To hold themselves in power they used boodle to debauch the voters, and they obtained the bribe money in return for betraying their sacred trust as representatives of the people; and as a concrete example they permitted the beneficiaries of the tariff to write any—the most outrageous—rates into the tariff bills. This was done time and again behind the walls of the secret party caucus, as you reactionary Republicans used the party caucuses. You used the party caucuses to build up the trusts and monopolies, to hold the present universally condemned currency and banking system in force in this country for more than 50 years, though it was enacted in the throes of the Civil War—made so favorable to the money interests because necessary to induce the unpatriotic money power to furnish the money needed to save the Union. Under the domination of selfish, unpatriotic men your party has been the ruinous instrument by which the wealth of the Nation has accumulated in the hands of a few, by which the mass of our people have been subjected to wrongs and sufferings that recall the infamies of the rule of the Bourbons in France preceding the French Revolution. I ought not to conclude this brief, necessarily condensed statement without looking a moment at the converse of the caucus proposition.

Suppose we do away with all caucuses, good and bad? That would put it in the power of one, two, three representatives in power, equally charged with their party fellows to promote certain great, nation-wide policies of government, to thwart the will of the people and defeat the noble aim of their party as a whole. The will of the majority must be supreme in a people's government. Else it is conceivable that an unworthy man, a vain man, a man full of spite or other petty motive, might defeat a great, patriotic, fundamental mission of a party in power.

Tennyson, in his wonderful vision in Locksley Hall, dreams of a federation of the world, where—

> The common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
> And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapped in universal law.

Mendel Beilis.

OF

HON. FRANK E. DOREMUS,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, November 6, 1913.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to attend, on Sunday last, a mass meeting of my constituents in Detroit, Mich., called for the purpose of protesting against the attempt now being made to convict Mendel Beilis, a Russian Jew, of the crime of ritual murder.

This meeting was attended by upward of 6,000 citizens of Detroit, representing various nationalities and religious beliefs. This splendid audience voiced in no uncertain terms the indignation felt by unbiased minds everywhere against the unjust and outrageous attempt to fasten upon the Jewish race the crime of ritual murder.

At the conclusion of the meeting the following memorial was unanimously adopted:

> The citizens of the city of Detroit, irrespective of race and religious affiliation, hereby protest against the prosecution of the outrageous charge of ritual murder brought by the Russian Government against Mendel Beilis.
> In the name of humanity we deplore and denounce this injustice, and we respectfully call on the United States Government to voice our indignation at this attack upon Judaism.

We furthermore respectfully request our Representative in Congress, Hon. FRANK E. DOREMUS, to present these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the proper department of our Government.

Attest:

ALFRED J. MURPHY,
Chairman of the Meeting.

I have also been requested to have printed in the RECORD the following resolution adopted by the Socialist Party in Detroit October 31, 1913:

Resolution.

We, as members of the Socialist Party of Detroit, Mich., assembled here to support the principles of international socialism, are opposed to all national and race prejudices. We have given the published reports of the Mendel Beilis case at Kief, Russia, careful consideration, and we declare the charge of ritual murder obsolete, unwarranted, and an insidious measure to arouse a fanatical religious persecution against the Jewish race. We believe this but one of the many tyrannical methods employed by the Russian Government in its suppression of political liberty and that a trial by jury has heretofore been denied this victim through fear of public sentiment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Socialist Party of Detroit, Mich., hereby take this method of voicing our protest against—

1. The ruthless procedure of the Russian Government of depriving any civilized race within its boundaries of its political and religious rights.

2. The undemocratic measure of denying its citizens the right of trial by jury.

3. The unjust victimizing of Mendel Beilis in denying him bail and keeping him imprisoned two years without a trial. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the State and national offices of the Socialist Party of the United States of America, with the recommendation that this resolution be given as much publicity as possible.

Currency.

OF
HON. A. W. LAFFERTY, OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, September 15, 1913,

On the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, for furnishing an elastic currency, affording means of rediscounting commercial paper, and to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me so to do, I hereby submit for printing in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the following interview printed in the Washington Post, October 13, 1913.

CUTS OUT THE BANKS—LAFFERTY'S BILL HANDS CURRENCY DIRECT TO THE FARMER—UNITED STATES LOANS ON MORTGAGES—AT 2 PER CENT INTEREST, OREGON MEMBER CLAIMS, THE GOVERNMENT WOULD MAKE PROFIT WHICH COULD BE USED IN BUILDING ROADS—SECURITY BETTER THAN PROVIDED IN GLASS BILL, HE SAYS.

Representative LAFFERTY, of Oregon, introduced a currency bill Saturday which would practically eliminate the bankers in the future issuance of paper money by the Government.

The Lafferty bill calls for the loan of Treasury notes direct to the farmers of the country at 2 per cent interest on first mortgages, which shall not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the land, and for loans of such Treasury notes at the same rate of interest to any holder of an outstanding United States bond who desires to deposit the bond as security.

It is stipulated that the Treasury notes to be so issued and loaned shall be redeemable at the Federal Treasury on demand, in gold coin or its equivalent, and that a reserve fund in gold coin shall be maintained in the Treasury at all times, equal to 5 per cent of the outstanding Treasury notes, for the purpose of such redemption. It is provided that the Treasury notes shall be retired and canceled as rapidly as the obligations to the Government securing the same are discharged.

ADVANTAGES CLAIMED BY AUTHOR.

It is claimed by the author of the bill that the security for the circulation of the Treasury notes which is provided in the bill is better than the security provided by the Glass-Owen bill, which provides for the issuance of Treasury notes based upon commercial paper. The distinction between the Lafferty bill and the administration currency bill, as claimed by the author of the former, is this: The administration bill provides for the issuance of Treasury notes to the banks at one-half of 1 per cent interest, secured by the deposit with the Government of commercial paper, whereas the Lafferty bill provides for the issuance of such Treasury notes to the farmers and investors of the country at 2 per cent interest upon the security of first mortgages on agricultural lands and upon Government bonds.

The Lafferty bill further provides that the profits derived by the Government through the loans of Treasury notes shall be set aside as a special fund for the building of public highways.

GOLD STANDARD SAFEGUARDED.

"There can be no question but what such a law as I have proposed would supply the country with all the currency it needs," said Representative LAFFERTY last night. "Many people will doubt the feasibility of the plan, because it is so simple. In other words, it will naturally appear to most persons at first blush as being too good to be true.

"But the time is just now approaching when the people are actually getting control of their own Government, and when that time arrives it may be safely said that this will be the only Government in the world that will be completely in the hands of the people. It is because such an epoch is near at hand that Congressmen are beginning to feel at liberty to act with absolute freedom and independence.

"It can not be said that the law I have proposed provides for fiat money or for an inflation of the currency. The bill safeguards the gold standard, making each Treasury note issued redeemable by the Federal Government in gold coin if demanded. Nor can there be any inflation of the currency so long as the redemption in gold coin of each Treasury note issued is provided for by an enforceable contract with good security.

WOULD REDUCE ALL INTEREST RATES.

"The passage of such a bill as I have introduced would at once bring interest rates down on short-time loans to 3 or 4 per cent. It would provide money to the farmers at 2 per cent and would reduce the cost of living in this country at least one-third.

"The farmers now have borrowed approximately $8,000,000,000 and pay interest annually amounting to $500,000,000. In other words, the farmers pay interest annually equal to $5 per capita of the population. This $5 a head is added to the cost of living.

"Moreover, if the manufacturers and transportation companies could get cheaper money, all products could be supplied to the consumer at greatly reduced cost.

"Our present bank credit system is under the control of the money power and is used to rob the public. It is a simple plan and is easily understood. The total stock of money in the United States is only $3,500,000,000. Yet the banks have 'on deposit' $17,000,000,000, or five times as much money as there is in existence in the country. The total stock of gold in the United States is only $1,000,000,000. In other words, if all the bank depositors should call for their money to-morrow and demand it in gold, the banks would not be able to pay but 1 depositor in 17, even if they had all the gold in the country in their vaults.

REAPING UNEARNED MILLIONS.

"By controlling the credit of the country, and by selling credit far in excess of the total money supply of the country, the money changers are reaping unearned millions annually from the American people. The money power in every country in the world is doing the same thing. America will be the first to break the shackles and set her people free.

"The complete solution of the problem is to issue money based upon the assets of the country, known as asset currency, and measure this money in gold, by making each paper dollar redeemable in gold or its equivalent. If this asset currency be issued direct to the people at 2 per cent interest hereafter, and upon the best of security, as proposed in my bill, it is safe to say that at least $10 per head will thereby be saved to the American people, which money is now going into the pockets of those who are creating swollen fortunes by controlling our credit."

National Drainage Congress.

OF
HON. JAMES T. LLOYD,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, November 14, 1913.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a statement of the National Drainage Congress concerning a bill (H. R. 8189) introduced by the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri, September 16, 1913, establishing a flood protection and drainage fund and providing for the protection, drainage, and reclamation of the overflowed and swamp lands in the United States, in promotion of the general welfare, in prevention of the dissemination of malaria and other diseases among the several States, and to promote interstate commerce by navigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

FLOOD PROTECTION, DRAINAGE, AND RECLAMATION OF OVERFLOWED LANDS, SWAMP LANDS, AND LANDS TOO WET FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

While the appalling floods of 1913 in the Ohio Valley were destroying lives and property, the President of the United States sent the following telegram:

THE WHITE HOUSE,

EDMUND T. PERKINS,
Chairman Executive Committee, National Drainage Congress,
First National Bank Building, Chicago, Ill.:

I regret that it is impossible for me to attend the sessions of the National Drainage Congress. The calamity in Ohio and Indiana makes clearer than ever before the imperative and immediate necessity for a comprehensive and systematic plan for drainage and flood control. I very earnestly hope that your deliberations may mark a long step forward in this direction. Accept my best wishes for a successful meeting.

WOODROW WILSON.

The following telegram was sent in reply:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 28, 1913.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:

Your message, March 27 received. * * * The National Drainage Congress, saddened by the tremendous flood disasters now inflicted upon our country, and knowing that such catastrophes are needless, accepts the responsibility of presenting to the people and the Congress of the United States a plan to alleviate and prevent the recurrence of loss of life and property. * * *

EDMUND T. PERKINS,
Chairman Executive Committee, National Drainage Congress.

The third annual meeting of the National Drainage Congress was held immediately thereafter, April 10, 11, and 12, at St. Louis, Mo., and the organization accepted this responsibility, 36 States being represented by approximately 500 delegates. After two days' cooperative deliberation by the national executive committee, the committee on resolutions, the section on malaria eradication, the central cooperative committee, and the woman's section, resolutions were adopted, addressed to the President, the Congress, and the people of the United States, urging:

First. That it is a proper function of the Government of the United States under the welfare clause of the Constitution to provide adequate works to control the flood waters of the country and so conserve them as to protect the life, health, and property of citizens, a duty equally imperative as that of protecting citizens from the attack of a foreign foe.

Second. That the Congress of the United States immediately make adequate provisions for flood prevention, for the regulation and control of stream flow, and for the drainage and reclamation of overflowed and swamp lands.

Third. That, as malarial diseases are widespread, especially in the regions where floods occur and swamps exist, causing great disability and suffering, loss of earning capacity, and a large number of preventable deaths, the several States and the Federal Government are requested to cooperate with the section of malaria eradication in the prevention by methods now well established of such diseases.

Fourth. That all reclamation organizations in the United States are invited to become part of the central cooperative committee, consisting of two members from each organization—National, State, district, or local—or by the governor of the State where there is no such organization, not surrendering their identity, charter, organization, or officers, for the purpose of advancing agreed-upon questions of national policy.

Copies of these resolutions were transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In May the general educational committee of the National Drainage Congress met in Washington, called upon the President, and conferred with the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and a number of Senators and Representatives. This committee was composed of the officers of the organization and prominent men and women from professional walks of life in all parts of the United States.

As a result of these conferences a subcommittee, known as the committee on Federal action, was appointed to cooperate with representatives of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture and draft a flood-prevention and drainage bill. This subcommittee was composed of E. J. Watson, of Columbia, S. C., State commissioner of agriculture, commerce, and industries; Frank B. Knight, of Chicago, Ill., member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and consulting engineer and expert on excavating and drainage machinery; Thomas P. Littlepage, of Washington, D. C., attorney at law; Morris Knowles, of Pittsburgh, Pa., member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, representing the flood commission of Pittsburgh; J. L. Craig, of Stockton, Cal., president of the river-regulation commission of Stockton; L. L. Lawrence, of Laurel, Miss., treasurer of the Railway Development Association and manager of immigration of the New Orleans, Mobile & Chicago Railroad; Joseph Hyde Pratt, of Chapel Hill, N. C., State geologist; J. S. Spiker, of Vincennes, Ind., member of the Western Society of Engineers, consulting and sanitary engineer; Reid Whitford, of Charleston, S. C., member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and engineer for the sanitary and drainage district of Charleston; and John H. Nolen, of Jefferson City, Mo., commissioner of land reclamation, State of Missouri. The Secretary of the Interior selected the following persons to confer with the committee representing the drainage congress: F. H. Newell, Director of the United States Reclamation Service; George Otis Smith, Director of the United States Geological Survey; and Brig. Gen. W. H. Marshall, consulting engineer, United States Reclamation Service, and former Chief Engineer, United States Army. The representatives of the Secretary of Agriculture were Prof. A. J. Henry, of the United States Weather Bureau; Raphael Zon, of the United States Forest Service; and S. H. McCrory, of the Bureau of Drainage Investigations of the Office of Experiment Stations.

The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, on June 21, 1913, invited to meet with him in Washington to discuss proposed flood-protection and drainage laws a number of eminent men, as follows: Isham Randolph, consulting engineer, Chicago, Ill.; Prof. William B. Clark, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.; Hon. T. Coleman du Pont, of Wilmington, Del.; W. W. Olds, jr., attorney at law, of Norfolk, Va.; Gov. W. S. Jennings, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Prof. Joseph Hyde Pratt, of Chapel Hill, N. C.; and M. C. Leighton, of Washington, D. C., former chief hydrographer of the United States Geological Survey. These, with Secretary Lane, Judge William R. King, of Oregon, George Otis Smith, and F. H. Newell, held a conference on June 28, 1913. A subcommittee was appointed, consisting of Gov. Jennings, Judge King, and Prof. Pratt, to suggest desirable legislation and report July 9, a day prior to the scheduled meeting of the committee on Federal action of the National Drainage Congress.

This last-mentioned committee met in Washington on July 10, 1913, and after consultation with the above mentioned, as well as with other eminent men in the city, drafted a bill, which draft was later submitted to the executive committee, and that committee, after making a number of changes and additions, approved it at a meeting held in Chicago on August 22, 1913.

September 10, 1913, the committee on Federal action and the board of governors of the National Drainage Congress assembled in Washington and conferred with the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and with Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, relative to this bill. On September 16, 1913, the bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Speaker-CLARK, and is now registered as H. R. 8189.

This bill is the reply of the National Drainage Congress to the telegram of March 27, 1913, from President Wilson, and is urged as providing the solution of the flood prevention and land drainage and general reclamation of the overflowed and swamp lands in the United States.

This bill establishes the power and indicates the method by which the Secretary of the Interior may construct the works that will control disastrous floods hereafter, thereby preventing loss of life and destruction of property, protecting overflowed lands, and draining the swamps, and thus reclaiming the millions of acres of such lands and other lands too wet for agricultural purposes. It provides that the expense of this work shall be borne by the owners of the land and other property benefited, and that the United States shall pay only for such work as will promote navigation by enlarging, improving, or altering navigable streams, or constructing drainage ditches suitable for navigation, or for that work which is primarily in defense of the general welfare by the improvement of the public health. It defines the rules by which these great works are to be constructed, vests the necessary authority in the Secretary of the Interior to do the work, leaves in the hands of Congress questions of policy and appropriations, and safeguards the financial interests of the United States.

The bill was designed to give the Secretary of the Interior full power without attempting to be too specific and definite as to the exact manner in which the work shall be done. It gives him authority to employ competent engineers and experts to work out systematic plans for comprehensive projects that shall embrace all the lands in each basin as a unit. Such a policy will enable the Secretary to establish a definite plan of flood-protection, drainage, and reclamation work for the entire country, and thus avoid the waste of money and effort through the construction of local works in unrelated units.

This bill is not confiscatory; neither does it infringe upon State or private rights. It does not give the Secretary of the Interior the right to reclaim individual or State lands without the consent of the owners. He is empowered to undertake the reclamation of private or State lands only when petitioned so to do by the owners of such lands.

This bill recognizes that the prevention of floods and the reclamation of our overflowed and swamp lands is one vast problem and is the most momentous the people of the United States have yet to solve, and that its solution, in order to be complete and successful, must proceed along the broadest possible lines in each locality of every State without unnecessary delay. It recognizes that the Government of the United States is charged under the Constitution with certain duties in the way of protecting its citizens and preserving their belongings, and that the performance of these duties should be delayed no longer.

The magnitude of the flood-protection work with which this bill charges the Secretary of the Interior is so well known as to require no comment, being over $200,000,000 in 1913 alone. The magnitude of the harm done by malaria, a disease that flourishes only because there are swamps and flooded areas in the country, was stated by Dr. William A. Evans, former health commissioner of the city of Chicago and writer of health articles for many papers, in his address before the National Drainage Congress at St. Louis, in April, 1913, when he said:

Loss through malaria deaths, per annum	$10,200,000
Cost of disability and illness from malaria	92,000,000
Depreciation of real estate and loss in earning power of labor, due to malaria	60,000,000
Total annual economic loss	162,200,000

In arriving at these estimates Dr. Evans frequently cut in half the generally accepted estimates. The terrible suffering that must be endured by humanity so long as malaria is permitted to exist is a matter of the deepest concern to the whole Nation.

The magnitude of the task of draining and reclaiming overflowed, swamp lands, and lands too wet for agricultural purposes is not so well known. The overflowed and swamp lands comprise an area of nearly 80,000,000 acres. In addition to this area, as large as the four States of Maine, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois combined, the Department of Agriculture has estimated that 150,000,000 acres of agricultural land under cultivation are not producing within 20 per cent as much as they should, because of insufficient drainage. The overflowed and swamp lands are located in 40 States, the Territory of Alaska not being included in the estimate, as follows:

It is not possible at the present time and under present conditions to reclaim profitably all of the overflowed and swamp lands for crop production, but a large per cent can be reclaimed and utilized for this purpose. Much of the remaining portion can be improved by reclamation works, and practically all of the 150,000,000 acres too wet for the best agricultural results can be improved by better drainage and their present productivity increased by one-fifth.

A few citations of what has been accomplished by the protection, drainage, and reclamation of overflowed and swamp lands will demonstrate in a general way the benefits to be derived from land reclamation and illustrate what may be expected from the reclamation of all our overflowed and swamp lands.

The La Marsh drainage district consists of 2,400 acres on the west side of the Illinois River, near the city of Pekin, Ill. It was organized a few years ago under the Illinois State drainage and levee acts. The land originally consisted of swamp and marshes or lands subject to periodical annual and destructive overflow. Money was raised by the issuance of drainage bonds by the district to pay for the protection and reclamation works. The land at that time was valued at from $12.50 to $20 per acre. The corn crop of 1911 raised on these 2,400 acres was sold for $85,000. The cost of protecting, draining, and reclaiming the district had amounted to $84,000, or about $35 per acre.

The Island farm, at Island, Minn., was reclaimed from the big Floodwood swamp, at a cost of $2 per acre for drainage and from $3 to $10 an acre for clearing. There are 4,000 acres in the farm, valued to-day, exclusive of building, at not less than $60 per acre. The land was practically worthless until reclamation work was perfected.

Great areas in southeast Missouri, which a few years ago were unhealthful, sparsely inhabited, and generally neglected, have been protected from overflow and drained, and in place of the swamps and marshes, few farms and homes, and straggling villages, there are to-day many homes, fertile fields, numerous and prosperous towns and cities.

A number of such illustrations could be found in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, South Carolina, and other States. Local reclamation work in the lower Mississippi Valley has been under way long enough to make it unquestionable that the land will produce each year enough to pay the total cost of works for protection, drainage, and reclamation.

In too many localities these works created by districts, individuals, or corporations, and even by States, are unrelated. Their success is too nearly dependent upon the manner in which the main drainage channels are constructed; the streams and rivers are kept open and within their banks, or of sufficient size; and—which is becoming a growing problem—upon their ability to defend themselves from the waters thrown upon them by the districts located above. Multiply these unrelated, selfish local drainage districts and works by 10,000, and it is apparent why the work as a whole should move along under the direction and supervision of a central authority and in accord with a fixed and recognized standard.

The bill introduced by Speaker CLARK provides this central authority which may determine and maintain such a standard. The first section creates a "flood protection and drainage fund" to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in the examination and survey for and the construction, operation, and maintenance of drains, canals, holding basins, reservoirs, levees, dikes, revetments, mattresses, tree planting, sluiceways, pumping plants, and other works wherever needed for the prevention of flood or for the protection, drainage, or reclamation of overflowed lands, swamp lands, and lands too wet for agricultural purposes, all of which are pronounced dangerous to the public health among the various States. This fund is made up of the money received from the sale of public lands in those States—not included in the reclamation act providing for the irrigation of arid lands—in which are public lands, and also in Alaska, from June 30, 1901, with the legal exceptions for educational purposes. The wording of the reclamation act was followed as nearly as possible in this and other sections of this bill.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary to undertake the works mentioned in section 1, and to make full reports to Congress each year on or before July 1, giving details of what has been done and of what is being done and of what is contemplated.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary to withdraw public lands from entry when required in carrying out the purposes of the act, and to restore them when found not necessary; to restore to public entry the public or ceded Indian lands, after they have been protected, drained, or reclaimed, specifying the number of acres which can be taken up as a "drainage" entry, which shall not be more than 160 acres, and specifying the amount of payment for these lands, being the regular fees plus the cost of the work, and how the purchase money shall be paid, the total cost of the drainage or reclamation of the land to be assessed against the land.

Section 4 authorizes the Secretary to let contracts for construction and to construct parts of a project or a complete project; it specifies the manner in which the Secretary shall dispose of the protected and reclaimed public and ceded Indian lands. This section contains a proviso that when the lands in a project are owned wholly by individuals, corporations, State or States, the owners may use the surveys and examinations, and let contracts, after they have organized the lands into a drainage district, and otherwise proceed under the State laws; and the further proviso that the Secretary may take over surveys partially completed, plans partially outlined, or works partially constructed by individual landowners.

Section 5 gives the Secretary the right to accept other than public lands and include them in a project where they are contiguous to or in the same basin with an area of public land to be protected or reclaimed, when the landowners petition him to do so. The Secretary is empowered to "include such State or private land, with the selected (public) land in a comprehensive protection, drainage or reclamation project, and construct the main and outlet canals, levees, and appurtenant structures necessary to the whole project." The cost is to be assessed against all the lands in proportion to the benefits derived. These assessments against State and private lands are to be collected by the State or drainage or levee district under State laws. To protect the Government and prevent interference by Federal with State authorities. Section 5 specifies that the Secretary of the Interior shall not proceed with such works until the drainage or levee district has issued bonds to the amount of the total assessments of cost against the private or State lands and delivered the bonds to him.

The Secretary is authorized to purchase the bonds at not less than par and to dispose of them. In lieu of the bond issue the Secretary may accept not less than 25 per cent of the total area in the project as a cession from State or private landowners, and then pay the entire cost of construction. This is upon the assumption that 25 per cent of the reclaimed land will be valuable enough to reimburse the Government for reclaiming the entire area of State or private lands. If the work is being done by State or States or drainage districts, the money derived from the bonds shall be turned over to them as required to carry on the work under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. This section will provide drainage districts an immediate market for their bonds at not less than par, provided they construct their work under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with plans prepared by him.

Section 6 empowers the Secretary to use the fund for the operation and maintenance of the works; that the works shall belong to the United States until all assessments of costs are paid, though these works shall pass to the landowners and be maintained by them under State jurisdiction and law after payment has been made to the Secretary for the major part of the lands.

Section 7 authorizes the Secretary to consult and cooperate with the Secretary of War when any contemplated work provides for the improvement or enlarging of natural channels or the excavation or construction of navigable canals, or which by reasonable enlargement or other alteration might be adapted to navigation purposes. If the War Department reports favorably upon the waterway feature, then the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall cooperate in construction of the project and the Government shall pay for that part of the work relating directly to navigation, the channels or canals to remain under the control and jurisdiction of the United States, but to be used so as not to impair their usefulness for protection or drainage purposes.

Section 8 seeks to bring about cooperation between States where overflowed and swamp areas and flood-visited districts which extend from one State into another. This section gives the Secretary of the Interior the power to construct works to protect or reclaim these areas when the several landowners or States shall request him to do so, even if there are no public lands in the area. The cost of this work is to be assessed against the land, as provided in section 5, except that the United States shall pay that part which relates directly to the improvement of navi-

Section 9 gives the Secretary the right to acquire rights or property by purchase or condemnation to carry out the act.

Section 10 authorizes the Secretary to lease the lands reserved or acquired under the act and to sell the same.

Section 11 authorizes the Secretary to accept from any State or States, drainage or levee district or districts, or other landowner a cession of reclaimable lands which can be included in any project and to use and dispose of the same.

Section 12 appropriates $20,000,000 from the general funds in the Treasury to form part of the "flood protection and drainage fund."

Section 13 imposes a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both for willful interference with, injury to, or destruction of any works constructed under the act.

Section 14 provides that the President may set apart and reserve town sites within or in the vicinity of any project, and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to have the same surveyed, subdivided, appraised, and sold. The funds so secured may be used for municipal improvements, and public reservations shall be conveyed to the municipal corporation when the same is duly organized.

Section 15 gives the Secretary authority to lease the surplus power or power privileges of any development of power necessary in the construction of any project; the leases shall be for not longer than 50 years, and preference shall be given to municipal purposes, and the moneys received shall be covered into the "flood protection and drainage fund."

Section 16 authorizes the Secretary to perform whatever acts that are necessary and to make the proper rules and regulations to carry into full force and effect the provisions of the bill.

The United States has reclaimed private lands under the reclamation or irrigation act. The Eighth Annual Report of the Reclamation Service shows that in the Orland project, located in the State of California, of 14,000 acres (p. 59), only 200 acres were public lands. In the Garden City (Kans.) project of 10,677 acres (p. 85), all were private lands. In the Carlsbad project of 20,073 acres (p. 134), the ownership is described in the report as "practically all private." There are 10,000 acres in the Hondo project (p. 134), and all of them are private except 240 acres. All of the 20,000 acres in the Leasburg project (p. 140) are private. All of the 180,000 acres in the Rio Grande project (p. 143) are private. All of the 60 000 acres in the Strawberry Valley project (p. 184) are private. There are only 433 acres of public land in the Williston project of 120,000 acres (p. 152), and 67 acres of State land and 11,500 acres of private lands.

If it is constitutional and proper and good for the Government to reclaim private arid land, is it not just as constitutional, proper, and good for it to reclaim private overflowed, and swamp lands?

The Constitution gives the United States the right to act in matters touching two or more States, upon petition of the States. In this connection it may be pointed out that every great flood which devastates the country is an interstate problem, and its solution requires correlated and coordinated work among several States. Thus, without considering the constitutional power of Congress to provide for the general welfare of the United States, the question of flood protection comes within the power of Congress, upon petition of the States affected, even if it does not come within the interstate-commerce and navigation provisions and powers.

While there may be many differences in detail, and more differences as to the solution of the details, there can be no serious questioning of the statement that the flood problem and the drainage and reclamation problem and the problem of navigation and interstate commerce by waterways are so interwoven with each other that no one can tell exactly where one starts and the other ends.

The numerous, most destructive, most dangerous, most persistent, and nearest enemies of the people of the United States are internal enemies—forces of nature. These forces kill more persons each year than were slain in battles and died from the effects of gunshot wounds on both sides during our destructive Civil War, and the property destroyed each year by floods is worth more than the cost of our war with Spain.

The passage of this bill will start the successful opposition to and bring about the eradication of these internal enemies—floods; diseases resulting from floods, swamps, and marshes; destruction of property; poverty due to nondevelopment of land rich in agricultural possibilities; and poverty and suffering due to the ravages of preventable diseases.

The passage of this bill by the United States Congress is respectfully urged by the undersigned officers of the National Drainage Congress.

OF

HON. HORACE M. TOWNER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, August 29, 1913,

On the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the House I am enabled to state my objections to House bill 7207. This bill grants to San Francisco the right to invade the Yosemite National Park, and to appropriate and destroy the Hetch Hetchy Valley therein for a reservoir and water supply. The principal reasons and grounds of my opposition may be briefly summarized as follows:

First. Admitting that San Francisco's present water supply is inadequate and that immediate relief is demanded, the passage of the present bill can not satisfy this demand, for the reason that it will require from 5 to 10 years to obtain water from Hetch Hetchy.

Second. Whatever may be done toward the acquisition for future needs of a permanent water supply, the nearby sources must first be developed as part of the system, and such development alone will supply all the demands of the city for years to come.

Third. In determining the location and source of a permanent water supply San Francisco should be required to obtain, if possible, such supply from the Coast Range or the Sacramento River, for they are nearest, most available, and will least injuriously affect other sections. At least three are thus available, Eel River, Putah Creek, and the Sacramento River.

Fourth. If a Sierra source is required, then the location should be within the Sacramento Valley rather than the San Joaquin, for the reason that the rainfall and water supply of the Sacramento is large and it can probably spare without injury the needed amount, while the supply in the San Joaquin is small and all of it is needed in the valley. There are several adequate and available supplies, either alone or in combination, in the Sacramento Valley.

Fifth. If an adequate and suitable supply can be obtained anywhere else without an invasion of a national park and the destruction of Hetch Hetchy, this application should be refused. There are several, and some of them can be obtained at much less cost than Hetch Hetchy.

Sixth. To divert 400,000,000 gallons of water daily from the San Joaquin Valley where it belongs would deprive 200,000 acres of irrigable land of water, render it permanently sterile, prevent further settlement and home building in the valley, stop its development and improvement, and impair its productive capacity to the extent of $20,000,000 yearly. The full water supply thus sought to be diverted can be utilized in the irrigation of the valley without the invasion of the park and the destruction of Hetch Hetchy.

Seventh. The terms of the bill extend national authority and jurisdiction over the interior waters of a State, an authority and jurisdiction hitherto claimed and acknowledged as belonging exclusively to the State. It invites and will inevitably bring conflicts between Nation and State, entailing endless litigation, irritating and injuring the people and municipalities whose interests are immediately affected, and endangering the cordial relationship that should exist between the State and the Nation.

Eighth. The proposal to use a national park for a municipal water supply is unreasonable and jeopardizes both interests. The primary object of the city is to secure a sanitary and uncontaminated water supply, and that discourages intrusion and tends toward exclusion. The purpose of a national park is to provide a place of rest and recreation for the people, and it is the policy of the Government to invite and induce the people to come within its precincts. There can be no harmonizing of interests where such divergent and antagonistic purposes exist.

Ninth. The city is to assume and is given the superintendence and sanitary control of the entire watershed which is tributary to Hetch Hetchy. This means that more than one-half of the Yosemite National Park, an area of over 500 square miles, is made subject to municipal control in the interest and with the purpose of securing an uncontaminated water supply. This will lead inevitably to the exclusion of the people from the larger and in many respects the most interesting portion of the park. If any measure of control is sought to be exercised by the Government over this portion, it will lead to conflicts of jurisdiction and interminable difficulties.

Tenth. Years ago, in 1864, the Government granted to the State of California the Yosemite Valley for park purposes. After an unsuccessful attempt to administer the trust committed to it, extending over a period of 42 years, the State upon its own initiative receded the tract to the Government, and it became a part of the present Yosemite National Park. It is a singular and indefensible proposition for the Government now to be asked to surrender a part of the park to a municipality of that State for its own private purposes.

Eleventh. The very object of a national park is to set apart and forever sequestrate its territory from the possibility of acquisition by corporations or individuals. To violate such purpose in this distinguished instance, when one of the most wonderful and noted of all the places on earth which has been thus deliberately set aside and solemnly dedicated for inviolate preservation is sought to be dismembered and destroyed at the instance of a single municipal corporation, would be to establish a precedent which would endanger the very foundation of our national-park system. If local interests can successfully assail and destroy the Nation's purpose in this instance, none of our national parks will be safe.

It is seldom that a bill is presented for the consideration of Congress in which so much both in substance and in principle is involved. So many issues not directly connected with the main proposition have been discussed and so much misunderstanding has been already exhibited with regard both to the facts and principles that a detailed consideration of at least the more important of these seems necessary.

AN EMERGENCY CASE.

It is stated in support of this bill that San Francisco and adjacent cities are greatly in need of an additional water supply, and its immediate passage is demanded as an emergency measure in order to relieve distressing existing conditions.

It is admitted that the present water supply is insufficient and that an additional supply is greatly needed, but it is denied that the passage of this bill is intended to or can supply any immediate or pressing demand. The testimony is uncontradicted that it will take from 4 to 10 years to obtain water from the Hetch Hetchy reservoir. It is admitted that the near-by sources must be developed in any event, no matter where the permanent supply is obtained. Ultimately San Francisco must, and it should at once, develop its near-by sources of supply, which are amply sufficient to supply all the needs of its people for years to come. It is a mistaken and cruel policy to allow the people of the city to suffer for want of water in order that their suffering may be used as a ground to secure the passage of this bill, when its passage can not immediately aid them, when plenty of water to supply every demand can be obtained in a short time from near-by sources, and when these near-by sources must be developed whether this bill is passed or not.

None of the larger projects can be completed for years, and in all estimates made by the engineers of the city, by the Army board, and by others, it is proposed first to develop the near-by sources. The bill itself contemplates the delay, for it provides that the city shall have three years in which to file even the preliminary plans, while payments to the Government for the use of the franchise are not to commence for five years. It would be better, and probably more satisfactory to the city, to determine early where its permanent water supply is to be secured. But it is indefensible to delay the development of its near-by sources when its people are suffering. Neither is it justifiable under the circumstances to press Congress to speedy action on a proposition that can not relieve existing distress or affect conditions, except indirectly, for years to come.

The present population of San Francisco is 417,000. Its present water supply for municipal use is about 37,500,000 gallons daily, or 90 gallons per capita. It should have, on a liberal allowance, 130 gallons per capita, or a daily supply of 54,210,000 gallons. It needs, therefore, an additional supply now of 16,710,000 gallons.

The population of the bay cities, including San Francisco, is 773,000. Their present combined water supply is 85,000,000 gallons daily, or 110 gallons per capita. On a 130-gallon basis they need 100,000,000 gallons, or an additional amount of 15,000,000 gallons.

The Army board, making a conservative estimate, places the increase that can be obtained by developing near-by sources at 100,000,000 gallons daily. This is about 85,000,000 in excess of even the liberal estimate of 130 gallons per capita and is sufficient to supply the increasing demands of the people for years to come. Mr. Wadsworth, the engineer employed by the Army board, gives a certain increase of over 100,000,000 gallons, and a probable increase of 140,000,000 gallons. In other words, the present supply can be more than doubled by merely the development of the existing near-by sources.

IS IT NECESSARY TO GO TO THE SIERRAS?

Admitting that San Francisco will eventually need a larger water supply than can be obtained from near-by sources, we may consider where such permanent and further supply should be obtained. It is asserted by the city that in order to secure such a supply it must go to the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

I assume there can be no well-founded objection to the following postulates:

In obtaining its water supply San Francisco should exhaust near-by sources before going elsewhere.

It should obtain its supply from the Coast Range, if it can there obtain a desirable and adequate supply, before going to the Sierras.

It should obtain its supply from the Sacramento River, if it can obtain a desirable and adequate supply, before going to the Sierras.

In determining what is a desirable supply, a healthful, potable water, such as other cities use, should be considered, and not what might be thought most desirable by San Francisco.

In determining what is an adequate supply, a fairly justifiable estimate of future requirements should be made and not an exaggerated estimate as to supposed requirements at a remote date.

Regarding the development of its near-by sources of supply, it has already been shown that at least an increase of 100,000,000 gallons daily can be thus secured. Allowing 20,000,000 gallons to supply present deficiencies, which is a liberal estimate, there is a balance of at least 80,000,000 to credit on future demands.

A COAST-RANGE SUPPLY.

As is well known, San Francisco is situated on the west coast of California. Paralleling the west coast is the Coast Range of mountains, with a watershed directly to the Pacific Ocean. To the north of San Francisco this watershed is for the most part thickly wooded and very slightly developed. There is a heavy rainfall, and irrigation is unnecessary. East of the Coast Range, paralleling it, but with wide valleys intervening, extending for more than 500 miles north and south, is the Sierra-Nevada Range. The great central valley, composed of the eastern watershed of the Coast Range and the western watershed of the Sierras, is divided into two parts, its northern section being known as the Sacramento Valley, its southern as the Valley of the San Joaquin. A bare statement of the physical conditions is enough to demonstrate the proposition that San Francisco ought to go to the western watershed of the Coast Range, if it can there obtain an adequate and desirable supply.

EEL RIVER SOURCE OF SUPPLY.

A supply can be obtained from the headwaters of the Eel River, which rises in the Coast Range and flows northwest into the Pacific Ocean. The impounding watershed would be mostly within a national-forest reservation and would include a drainage area of 326 square miles. It could be easily kept under sanitary protection, would not need filtration, and would furnish a supply of pure, sweet mountain water in every way desirable. It would require a conduit of 115 miles, or 17 miles shorter than would be required for Hetch Hetchy, and is nearer than any Sierra source. Its cost is estimated at $24,000,000, or less than one-third the estimated cost of Hetch Hetchy, which is placed at $77,000,000. It would furnish 200,000,000 gallons or more daily.

This source was approved by Mr. H. H. Wadsworth, an eminent engineer of the United States Army, who was selected by the Army board to make investigation as to the different available water supplies for San Francisco. It never met with favor from the city, because it claimed that they needed an additional supply of 400,000,000 gallons, and for that reason the 200,000,000 gallons this source could supply would be insufficient.

AMOUNT NEEDED.

It will be necessary to consider whether San Francisco's demand for an additional water supply of 400,000,000 gallons daily is reasonable, and whether an inquiry as to available sources ought to be limited to those only which will furnish such an amount. In order to make a basis for such a demand it is claimed, first, that the supposed requirements of the year 2000 should be taken as the basis of the estimate. Such a remote date, nearly a century in the future, is unreasonable. It would be reasonable to make a fair estimate for future needs; but such a date is beyond any degree of fair consideration. Twenty-five years is an ordinary estimate; 50 years would be generous; 90 years is absurd.

It is estimated that at that date the bay cities, with a present population of about 700,000, will have added nearly 3,000,000 people, and so the city desires a supply that will furnish all the water 3,700,000 people may want in the year 2000—a tremendous leap into the future, but it is necessary in order to make a showing for the taking of Hetch Hetchy.

According to Mr. Percy V. Long, attorney for the city and county of San Francisco, the city now uses from thirty-seven to forty million gallons daily. And yet a city which last year used 40,000,000 gallons suddenly and vehemently demands that its supply be increased to 540,000,000 gallons. Suffering because of an inadequate supply, but on which it has voluntarily subsisted for years, it contends that its supply should be increased immediately to thirteen times its present volume.

In order to swell the demand to this enormous quantity it is estimated that 95,000,000 gallons daily will be needed for the irrigation of truck patches and vegetable gardens near the cities, and so that amount is added to the supposed requirements.

To add to the absurd injustice of this demand for water from Hetch Hetchy to irrigate lands near San Francisco it should be remembered that the waters from Hetch Hetchy are tributary to the San Joaquin Valley, where more than 200,000 acres of land are barren because of lack of water. Yet it is proposed to carry this water across the valley to which it belongs and for which it is suffering 142 miles to satisfy the demands of the truck growers and market gardeners of San Francisco.

If a 50-year period be taken as a reasonable basis of demand and a liberal estimate of 1,800,000 as the population at that time of the bay cities, with an allowance of 130 gallons per capita, there will be needed for municipal purposes 234,000,000 gallons daily. With their present supply developed to 134,000,000, as is admitted that it can be, there will be needed for even the remote period of 1963, 100,000,000 gallons additional supply, while the Eel River alone can supply double that amount.

But if the extravagant demands made by San Francisco for an additional supply of 400,000,000 gallons be admitted, the Coast Range can furnish it, and do so more cheaply than can be obtained by going to the Sierras.

By combining with the Eel River supply a supply from Putah Creek, which is nearer, and which will alone furnish 341,000,000 gallons daily, a supply could be obtained which would furnish daily 541,000,000 gallons. This would be enough to supply the most enthusiastic demands, and the total cost of the Eel River-Putah Creek system would be $53,000,000 as against $77,000,000 for Hetch Hetchy, a saving in favor of the Coast Range source of $24,000,000 for the city. Besides, this system could be fully completed in three years, while it is estimated by most engineers that it will require twice that time to complete the Hetch Hetchy system.

THE SACRAMENTO RIVER.

The Sacramento River rises in northern California and flows south between the Coast Range and the Sierra Nevada Mountains. It receives as a confluent the waters of the San Joaquin River, which rises in southern California and flows north between the Coast Range and the Sierras. Together these mountain streams turn westward after their union and empty into the bay on which San Francisco is situated. It is proposed to take the water necessary for the bay cities at a point on the Sacramento River near Rio Vista, where it is always free from sea water.

The advantages of this source of supply are that it can be developed to meet increasing demands; the supply will always be sufficient to meet any possible requirements; the quality of the water will be far above the average; it would require no reservoir; no national park would be invaded, no irrigation claims infringed upon, and no injury or harm done to anybody.

The cost of the Sacramento system is figured by the Army board as more than the Hetch Hetchy source. But an analysis of the estimate shows that, in fact, the initial cost is much cheaper, or only $52,000,000, while the cost of Hetch Hetchy is seventy-seven millions. The additional amount of the Army board estimate is made up by a theoretical capitalization of the cost of pumping and filtration spread over many years. The city objects to the consideration of this source, first, because it is a river supply. But most of the cities of the United States secure their water from rivers, and there is none of them which boasts of a stream so advantageous as the Sacramento. Itself a mountain stream, and swollen by other streams which receive their flow from melting snows on lofty mountain sides, it would be difficult to imagine a more desirable source of supply. The city also objects because the system will require filtration. Here again it should be remembered that nine-tenths of the cities of the United States are required to filter their water. It is held by many experts that perfect sanitation requires filtration, and that all water for domestic use, whatever its source, should be filtered.

It is therefore apparent that the contention of the city that in order to obtain a desirable and adequate supply it must go to the Sierra Nevada Mountains is not well founded. Its needs for many years to come can be satisfied by the development of its present near-by sources, and in case an additional supply should be now considered necessary, two such sources are available without going to the Sierras.

OTHER SOURCES OF SUPPLY.

If, in spite of the objections suggested, it be thought that San Francisco is justified in her demands for a water supply from the Sierras, the next inquiry should be to what part of the Sierras it should go.

The idea has been assiduously cultivated that Hetch Hetchy was the only available source for a water supply. This is so far from the truth that the effort merits ridicule. In fact, there is no city of its size in the United States which has open to it so many superior sources as San Francisco. The Army board, selected for the purpose, reports 13 as possible sources. They report 7 as practically available. They report 5 as fully adequate and available. Four of these, including the McCloud River, rising in Mount Shasta, are in the Sierras, and one which we have already considered, the Sacramento River. In its report to Secretary Fisher the board says:

> The board is of the opinion that there are several sources of water supply that could be obtained and used by the city of San Francisco and adjacent communities to supplement the near-by supplies as necessity develops. From any one of these sources the water is sufficient in quantity, and is or can be made suitable in quality, while the engineering difficulties are not insurmountable. The determining factor is principally one of cost.

Hon. Herbert Parsons, in a report to Congress while he was a member, said:

> San Francisco is in an enviable situation for water supply. It has all the Sierras with their mountain snows to draw upon. There are no less than 16 different systems.

In his testimony before the Senate committee Mr. James D. Phelan, formerly mayor of San Francisco, was asked:

> You know, Mr. Phelan, that you could go out overnight anywhere along the Sierras and get an abundant supply of pure water for the city?
> Yes—
> Said Mr. Phelan—
> by paying for it.

On this floor, in this debate, the advocates of the bill admit there are other sources. The author of the bill said, "There are a number of other available supplies." The distinguished Representative from San Francisco said, "There are four principal sources that could be utilized."

It is not to enable the suffering people of San Francisco to get water, but for the municipality to get it cheaply, that this bill is pressed. A bargain is sought, and the interests of all the people of the United States are to be sacrificed in order to enable San Francisco to have it. But even that sordid ground can not avail, for there is overwhelming testimony to prove that there are many other supplies available that can be obtained for much less money.

It is, however, believed by those who oppose the passage of this bill, and indeed it would seem by everybody not directly interested in its passage, that there are other and higher interests to be considered than saving some money for San Francisco.

SACRAMENTO AND SAN JOAQUIN VALLEYS.

If the Sierras are to be used as a source of water supply for San Francisco, either the valley of the Sacramento or that of the San Joaquin must be invaded for that purpose. A comparison of the valleys should be made, and their respective claims for protection should be considered before action is taken.

The valley of the Sacramento is the great northern central valley of California, and the valley of the San Joaquin is the great southern central valley of the State. These valleys open into each other, and together extend for more than 500 miles north and south within the State and between the Coast Range and the Sierras. According to the Geological Survey the floor of the Sacramento Valley is estimated at 4,250 square miles; that of the San Joaquin Valley at 11,500 square miles, or nearly three times as large. The rainfall in the Sacramento Valley is 20 inches a year; that of the San Joaquin but 10 inches, or only one-half as much. The total flow per annum from the Sacramento watershed is estimated at 24,500,000 acre-feet; that of the San Joaquin at 11,500,000 feet, or less than half. The water supply on an engineering basis of the Sacramento would be 8 feet covering the floor of the valley, while the depth in the San Joaquin Valley would be but 18 inches. It will be seen, therefore, that there is about six times as much water supply in the Sacramento as there is in the San Joaquin Valley.

Certainly under these circumstances San Francisco should go to the Sacramento Valley rather than to the valley of the San Joaquin, if it can do so. If it can be justified under any circumstances in taking water from a source remote and to which it can have but a secondary claim, it should go where the largest supply is to be found and where those who live nearer and have primary interests shall be least injured. It must be apparent from a mere statement of existing physical conditions that the larger valley with the smaller water supply should not be robbed of what it has if an ample and suitable supply can be obtained from another source without injury or loss to anyone.

THE M'CLOUD RIVER.

Fortunately there are ample and superior supplies to be had in the Sacramento watershed.

A source was examined and approved by the Army board, situated on the watershed of the beautiful McCloud River, which flows into the Sacramento. Its source would be amid the eternal snows and glaciers of Mt. Shasta. In every desirable requisite it is remarkable. The Army board reports it as "clear, cold, and palatable." A large part of the watershed lies within a national forest reserve. No reservoir or storage will be necessary, and it can furnish 770,000,000 gallons daily if needed. As Col. Biddle, speaking for the board, said:

> There is plenty of water in the McCloud River for all needs * * * and the least flow is twice what San Francisco needs—even on its extravagant 400,000,000 basis. The cost is estimated by the Army board at from $58,000,000 to $64,000,000.

Here is a source from which San Francisco can obtain all the water she even thinks she needs, as pure and desirable as any on earth, at a cost of $19,000,000 less than Hetch Hetchy, while the taking will not deprive anyone of water needed for irrigation or any other purpose, and by which no national park will be invaded, and no objects of great natural beauty destroyed.

The only objections which San Francisco can urge against this project are, first, that it will take a larger initial expenditure than Hetch Hetchy, and, figuring on a capitalization basis, the latter is considered cheaper. The second and probably the principal ground of objection is that the McCloud River source will furnish no water power, while the Hetch Hetchy will furnish 115,000 horsepower, which San Francisco can use and sell to her own advantage.

So this source is disparaged and set aside to satisfy a forced and fanciful economy and to enable San Francisco to experiment in municipal ownership and sell water power at a profit. Urged on Congress as a humanitarian proposition, as a sacrifice of objects of inestimable worth and surpassing beauty, necessary in order to save the lives of the women and children of a drought-stricken city, it is revealed as a deliberate destruction of a national treasure to carry out the mercenary schemes of city boomers for their own glory and self-interest.

The press reports that in the course of this bill's discussion an impressionable legislator, stirred by the city's pathetic appeals, impulsively declared he would rather be able to furnish a cup of pure water to a thirsty child than to see all the beautiful scenery on earth. Another, in a burst of impassioned sentimentality, exclaimed:

> I would rather hear the laughing voice of a child relieved from the grasp of a water monopoly than the warble of all the song birds in Christendom.

It is only necessary, in order to relieve the tension if tender sensibilities are stirred by such outbursts, to recall the fact that if any thirsty child is suffering for a drink in San Francisco it should appeal to the men who have kept the city thirsty and dirty for years in order to make a false appeal to carry through this scheme. It should be further remembered that at any time it chose for 10 years past the city might have relieved itself from the grasp of the water monopoly, but that, instead, the dreaded octopus appears before Congress allied with the city and unites with it in asking Congress to pass this bill. It might further be suggested that if the fabulous child whose imaginary thirst evokes such intense sympathy is compelled to wait for five years until its suffering can be relieved by the procurement of water from Hetch Hetchy, its condition will be pitiable, indeed.

THE YUBA, AMERICAN, AND COSUMNES SOURCES.

But the McCloud River is by no means the only source in the Sacramento Valley from which San Francisco might secure its water supply. The Yuba, American, and Cosumnes Rivers could be used. The Army board reports that they are all of the same general nature—"They all rise in the high Sierras, and the quality of the water is excellent."

The Yuba River would furnish 164,000,000 gallons daily, and its cost is estimated at $61,000,000.

The American River will only furnish 105,000,000 gallons, and for that reason has been considered in connection with the Cosumnes and other combinations.

The Cosumnes can furnish 212,000,000 gallons. Combined with the American, 317,000,000 gallons could be obtained.

THE MOKELUMNE SOURCE.

The Mokelumne River is nearly at the dividing line between the valleys of the Sacramento and the San Joaquin. It, too, rises in the high Sierras, and the quality of the water is excellent. Its supposed capacity was 128,000,000 gallons, and for that reason it has been principally considered in connection with other sources. On this basis it has been combined with the American and Cosumnes and other sources north of it and with the Stanislaus, Cherry Creek, and Lake Eleanor sources to the south. As these sources adjoin each other several combinations are possible, and any amount needed may be secured, the quality being first class in all.

The Mokelumne River as a single source was not considered feasible by the Army board or by its chief engineer, Mr. Wadsworth, because on reports and estimates before them it was supposed it could not furnish more than 128,000,000 gallons daily. An order was made by the Interior Department at the time of the appointment of the Army board that the city should investigate and report to the board for its consideration all possible available sources. Investigation was made by engineers appointed by the city, and it was supposed that all their reports were presented to the board. It is now known, however, that one of the reports thus obtained, known as the Bartel report, was never submitted either to Mr. Wadsworth or to the board. It is significant that this report shows that the Mokelumne River source alone could furnish 432,000,000 gallons daily. When it is considered that this source is much nearer than Hetch Hetchy, and that the cost would be a great deal less, a sufficient reason why the city should not desire the Bartel report to receive consideration is shown.

LAKE ELEANOR AND CHERRY CREEK.

The bill provides for a triple source, or a combination of sources, viz, from the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the Lake Eleanor Basin, and the Cherry Valley. Lake Eleanor is a beautiful mountain lake about 9 miles long and 5 miles wide, situated in the northwest part of the Yosemite National Park. It could be utilized as a water supply without destroying its beauty. Cherry Valley is just outside the park, but is within the Stanislaus National Forest Reservation. It is estimated, principally on data furnished by the city, that the two sources combined would furnish 190,000,000 gallons daily. But much larger estimates are made. Mr. John P. Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, who visited the sources with the officials and engineers of the city, says that Lake Eleanor alone would impound 39,000,000,000 gallons and furnish 250,000,000 gallons daily.

In the winter of 1909–10 Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, and two engineers of the Reclamation Service reported that Lake Eleanor was ample to meet all the city's prospective demands. Mr. Harrow, the engineer commissioned by the Society for the Preservation of National Parks, in a report showed that Lake Eleanor and Cherry Creek were sufficient to supply the city up to at least 1948.

In 1908 Hon. James A. Garfield, then Secretary of the Interior, made an executive order authorizing San Francisco to use the Lake Eleanor Basin and Hetch Hetchy Valley as sources for a water supply. But it was provided in the permit granted that the Lake Eleanor site should be developed to its full capacity first, and that Hetch Hetchy should be used only in the event that the Lake Eleanor supply should prove insufficient. At that time the city proposed to develop Lake Eleanor first. But the passion for Hetch Hetchy developed and when it was realized that in all probability under the terms of the Garfield permit Hetch Hetchy would never be reached—because Lake Eleanor would furnish all that San Francisco could use for municipal purposes—the city never availed itself of its privilege under the permit and suffered it to lapse. Then the plan was changed and it now proposes to develop Hetch Hetchy first and only go to Lake Eleanor and Cherry Valley when the demand shall warrant.

If any law is passed allowing under any circumstances the taking of Hetch Hetchy, it would be only fair and just that it should provide, as did the Garfield permit, that Hetch Hetchy should only be taken after the near-by supplies had been developed and after the Lake Eleanor and Cherry Valley sources had proven insufficient to supply the legitimate municipal demands of the bay cities.

COST.

It is not considered by those who oppose this measure that the taking of Hetch Hetchy can be justified merely because it is cheaper. Certainly the invasion of a national park, set aside forever as a possession of all the people to be handed down inviolate to the generations that are to follow, can not be justified because other projects will cost more.

But if because Hetch Hetchy is cheaper should be considered as a reason justifying its sacrifice the fact of a material difference should be clearly shown. In the review of other available sources it has been shown that the Eel River source, if considered sufficient, would cost less than one-third that of Hetch Hetchy. Combined with Putah Creek an ample supply could be obtained at a total cost of $53,000,000, or $24,000,000 less than Hetch Hetchy. The cost of securing a supply from the Sacramento River would be only $52,000,000, a still larger saving. The McCloud River source would cost but $61,000,000. The cost of the combined American and Cosumnes would be much less than Hetch Hetchy, as would a combination of the Cosumnes and Mokelumne. A combination of all three, the American, Cosumnes, and Mokelumne, would cost about the same. A combination of the Mokelumne, Lake Eleanor, and Cherry Creek would also cost about the same. The Mokelumne alone would cost much less than Hetch Hetchy, as would Lake Eleanor and Cherry Creek combined.

It is true that the Army board reports that Hetch Hetchy would cost $20,000,000 less than other sources, but in order to reach that conclusion all plans that will not furnish 400,000,000 gallons daily are eliminated. Besides, in considering, for instance, the Sacramento River project, although the actual cost is but $52,000,000, the cost of pumping and filtering is capitalized and figured as an element of the cost, although no cost of administration of Hetch Hetchy is considered. In estimating the cost of the McCloud River project the actual cost is but $58,000,000, or $19,000,000 less than Hetch Hetchy. But because the initial expenditure would be greater on the McCloud project, it is considered the cheaper. It should also be remembered that most of the cost estimates are based on data furnished by the city, which seems determined to force a favorable view of Hetch Hetchy. In any event it is certain San Francisco can obtain a permanent, adequate, and suitable water supply for much less than $77,000,000.

IRRIGATION IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY.

It was supposed that the promoters of this enterprise had satisfied the irrigation interests dependent on a water supply from the Tuolumne River. There are two large water districts, the Turlock and the Modesto. These districts through their agents secured certain concessions in the bill which the water users thought preserved their rights. They now claim that their agents did not act in good faith, that their interests are not properly protected in the bill, and they now desire to repudiate the agreement made for them. Both Senator WORKS and the chairman of the water users of the Modesto district say that 99 per cent of the water users now oppose the bill. Other protests have been filed.

But there are other interests to be considered besides those of the people now served in the Turlock and Modesto districts. As we have already seen, the San Joaquin Valley is a vast arid region with very little rainfall, but with a soil very responsive and productive under irrigation. Over 7,000,000 acres in extent, it will take all the water belonging to the valley to irrigate one-half of it. Even if the settlement made by San Francisco with the Turlock and Modesto people ought to stand, their agreement should not be controlling. If there are other districts that need it and other lands that could be rendered fruitful by it within the San Joaquin Valley, then the 400,000,000 gallons daily ought not to be diverted from the valley to which they belong and carried 142 miles to San Francisco.

The irrigible area of the Tuolumne River is about 450,000 acres. There are now under water in the Turlock and Modesto districts about 240,000 acres. This leaves about 210,000 acres yet to be developed. It is proposed to divert 400,000,000 gallons daily from the valley, which, if used for irrigation, could supply more than this 210,000 acres.

As between San Francisco and the home makers of the San Joaquin Valley, it is proposed to forever deprive over 200,000 acres of land and doom it to eternal sterility. It has been said that in the struggle for water the thirst of the people must prevail over the thirst of the land; but this saying is merely sententious; it is not sensible. The land is not crying for relief. It is satisfied to bask in sun-fed idleness forever. It is the desire of the people for bread, for homes, for a chance to add to the productive capacity of the world, for an opportunity to transform a desert into a garden—this is what should be considered. Each of the more than 200,000 acres that could be made fruitful with the water San Francisco wants can produce at least $100 of food products each year. Approximately the value to the valley to the State and to the world in food products would be over $20,000,000 a year, or more each year than San Francisco claims it can save by taking Hetch Hetchy rather than some other source.

This objection becomes even more forceful when it is understood that the irrigation of this additional land may be secured without an invasion of the national park and the destruction of Hetch Hetchy. The water can be impounded outside the park and lower down the river. The La Grange Dam and Reservoir, which now supplies the Turlock and Modesto districts and irrigates more than 240,000 acres, is on the Tuolumne River outside the park. Additional impounding dams in the foothills outside the park may be built to furnish water for the land not now included in those districts and the park be thus preserved.

Hon. Francis Burton Harrison in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior suggested that a supply for San Francisco could be obtained without going into the park by building reservoirs below it between the Merced and Tuolumne Rivers. This proposition was submitted to the Army board for consideration, but was not approved because the water would require filtration for domestic use. But no such requirement would be necessary for irrigation. Secretary Fisher refused to permit the use of the park for the reason, among others, that he desired information as to whether "the use of Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site is necessary if the full flow of the Tuolumne is to be conserved." There has never been any showing that it was necessary. On the contrary, the evidence is strongly to the effect that practically all the water of the Tuolumne can be utilized for irrigation without invading the park and destroying Hetch Hetchy.

Mr. Frederick H. Newell, director of the Reclamation Service, in his testimony before the committee, was asked:

It would be feasible to store all this water for irrigation without a reservoir at Hetch Hetchy?

His answer was:

Yes, sir. From a financial point of view it is still an open question; from an engineering point of view it is feasible.

We may leave the financial question to the people who will need the water. Under the provisions of their State law even the largest irrigation projects may be handled. It is an all-sufficient answer to those who believe that Hetch Hetchy must be used anyway, to quote the highest authority to the effect that all the water from the Tuolumne may be used for irrigation by those who are best entitled to it and who need it most without destroying Hetch Hetchy.

OPPOSING INTERESTS.

It is claimed by the advocates of this bill that they have now satisfied all opposing interests except the "nature lovers." That they have made a strenuous effort in that direction is certainly true, but it is doubtful if they have entirely succeeded. They silenced the opposition of the present "monopoly" supplying the city by promising payment for its property if the Hetch Hetchy plan went through. They endeavored to satisfy the demands of those already using water from the Tuolumne source by placing in the bill everything they asked for. The result is that the bill is confused, uncertain, contradictory, verbose, indefinite, and impossible of administration. It raises and invites controversy between National and State powers. It is merely a conglomeration of everything suggested by any person or interest opposed to it and whose objection could be removed by inserting his or its pet project. A prominent advocate of the bill confessed:

There are bad things in the bill, but they were put there to get votes.

If there is any one thing on which the people of the Western States have hitherto insisted, it has been that each State should be allowed to control its interior waters in the interests of its own people. They have been particularly insistent that national laws and regulations should not be allowed to interfere with State control. Yet here is an attempt by act of Congress to determine and control rights of irrigation, to parcel out and fix by national law storage and flow, to apportion waters within the territory of the State among municipalities and water districts created and governed by State laws.

An idea of the significance of this seems to be dawning upon the consciousness of even the people of San Francisco, as shown by an editorial in one of their leading papers, of date September 12:

While we all desire and expect to get the Tuolumne water, it is not desirable that the bill shall be rushed through without a full and free discussion of the rights of the States. The water which we will need for the next few years will have to be got by the development of the Spring Valley property—and we should make a very poor trade to surrender the rights of the State within its own boundaries in order to get glory for our municipal officials just as an election is coming on.

The present chief supply—

As the bill was originally introduced it settled the rights of the irrigation districts—notwithstanding any general laws of the United States or of the State of California, or any general rules of property established by the courts.

This clause has been eliminated, but the provisions it was designed to protect still remain, and its language fitly describes the purpose of the bill.

In a report to Congress on a similar bill in 1909 Hon. F. W. MONDELL, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, and six other members of the Public Lands Committee said regarding these provisions that they related—to subjects not under the control of Congress and with regard to which it has no authority and ought not to attempt to legislate. The legislation is objectionable for the reasons above mentioned, which take it out of the category of legislation of doubtful propriety and expediency and place it in that of doubtful constitutionality and of unquestionably mischievous and dangerous character.

THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Having shown that this is not an emergency case, and that San Francisco can secure an ample and superior water supply elsewhere, that to take water from the San Joaquin Valley would be an act of gross injustice, an endeavor will be made to show what will be the results if this contemplated invasion of the Yosemite National Park and the destruction of the Hetch Hetchy Valley succeeds.

The Yosemite National Park is situated on the western slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains near the center of the State of California. Its present boundaries were established in 1906 and embrace an area of 1,124 square miles, or 719,000 acres. It extends from the crest of the Sierras on the east to the foothills of the San Joaquin Valley on the west. It consists mainly of two watersheds—that of the Merced River, in which is situated the Yosemite Valley, and that of the Tuolumne River, in which is situated the Hetch Hetchy Valley. These watersheds are nearly equal in area, that of the Tuolumne being somewhat the larger. The rivers both flow westerly into the San Joaquin, separated by a spur of the Sierras. The section was first made known to white men in 1851. It was not made accessible until 1874. In 1864 Congress granted the Yosemite Valley to the State of California, which retained jurisdiction over it until 1906, when it receded it to the United States. The park was established by Congress in 1890.

The territory now embraced within the park boundaries was selected and set aside because it is a place of marvelous beauty and grandeur. There is nowhere in the world its counterpart, and nowhere else can be found a national park containing so much of varied beauty and wonder. It is a land not only of scenic wonders, but of marvelous climate. Prof. F. E. Matthes, of the United States Geological Survey, describes it as "a climate paralleled by that of few mountain regions elsewhere in the world. It has a climate of sunshine and serene skies, dry, but not too dry; in summer warm, but not uncomfortably warm; withal characterized by nights that are cool, even frosty at the higher levels. The winters are cold enough to insure a snowfall of 2 to 4 feet in the lowest valleys and to maintain perpetual ice fields and glaciers on the highest crests. One goes to the Yosemite region not merely to admire its cliffs and waterfalls, nor to walk through the aisles of its great forests, but to revel in the full enjoyment of these wonders in the pure invigorating air and the restful calm that reigns from day to day." The hotels are open all the year, and the park is becoming known as an attractive winter resort, frequented by those who enjoy winter sports, such as snowshoeing, tobogganing, and coasting.

So far only the southern half of the park, embracing the Merced watersheds and the Yosemite Valley, have been improved and made accessible by the Government. But it is expected that the northern half, the Tuolumne watershed with the Hetch Hetchy Valley, will soon be improved and made equally accessible. Indeed, the northern part of the park is thought by many to be the more wonderful and beautiful. It embraces not only the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which is the counterpart of the Yosemite, but also the Tuolumne Canyon, which is second only to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and the Tuolumne Meadows, an alpine valley without equal in beauty and scenic grandeur in America. Thus, of the four prominent objects of interest in the park, three are in the Tuolumne watershed and are so far practically undeveloped and inaccessible.

The Yosemite National Park is visited annually by a constantly increasing number of visitors, not only from this country but from all over the world. One hundred and fifty from Great Britain alone visited the park in 1912, while almost every other country was represented. It is regarded everywhere by civilized men as one of the greatest of the world's marvels. The Westminster Review said of it:

The Yosemite is the wonder not only of California, but of the world.

Ralph Waldo Emerson said:

It is the only place I ever found that came up to the brag.

These words of praise refer principally to the Yosemite Valley, and when it is understood that this valley, while of surpassing beauty, is only one of the many marvels of the park, that the park is one hundred times larger than the valley from which it derives its name, and throughout the entire area is a veritable wonderland of grandeur and beauty, something of its true value can be appreciated.

Of the park as a whole a recent writer gives this description:

Of this glorious range (the Sierras) the Yosemite National Park is a central section, 36 miles in length and 48 miles in breadth. The famous Yosemite Valley lies in the heart of it, and it includes the headwaters of the Tuolumne and Merced Rivers, two of the most songful streams in the world; innumerable lakes and waterfalls and smooth, silky lawns; the noblest forests and the loftiest granite domes; the deepest ice-sculptured canyons, the brightest crystalline pavements, and snowy mountains soaring into the sky twelve and thirteen thousand feet, arrayed in open ranks and spiry pinnacled groups partially separated by tremendous canyons and amphitheaters; gardens on their sunny brows, avalanches thundering down their long white slopes, cataracts roaring gray and foaming in the crooked rugged gorges, and glaciers in their shadowy recesses working in silence, slowly completing their sculpture; new-born lakes at their feet, blue and green, free, or incumbered with drifting icebergs like miniature Arctic Oceans, shining, sparkling, calm as stars.

Nowhere will you see the majestic operations of nature more clearly revealed beside the frailest, most gentle and peaceful things. Nearly all of the park is a profound solitude, yet it is full of charming company, full of God's thoughts, a peace of peace and safety amid the most exalted grandeur and eager, enthusiastic action, a new song, a place of beginnings abounding in first lessons on life, mountain building, eternal, invincible, unbreakable order, with sermons in stones, storms, trees, flowers, and animals brim full of humanity.

AS A PRECEDENT.

To invade this national park, the possession of all the people of the Nation, to utterly destroy one of its chief objects of interest, and to practically transfer control and relinquish sovereignty over one-half of the entire area of the park to a municipality, is the object and purpose of this bill. The State of California relinquished its claim and trust to the Nation; but a city of that State is now demanding a recession to it of a territory fifty times as large, not to better carry out the purpose of its establishment, but to destroy it and transform it into a municipal utility.

Their position is simply this: The national parks are merely temporary sequestrations of natural objects of beauty which may be invaded and those natural objects of beauty destroyed whenever any municipality situated near enough to use them desires to appropriate them to its own use and benefit. In this case necessity can not be urged as a reason—only cheapness. So that by the passage of this bill it will be established as a precedent that whenever any municipality situated within appropriating distance from a national park finds it can get water and power which it may desire for municipal purposes, to sell to others, to run its street cars, or to irrigate its adjacent truck patches cheaper from a national park than from elsewhere, Congress should give it such privilege.

Is it supposed that any national park is safe if this bill becomes a law? Its passage will be an invitation for the invasion of every national park in the country. What would be thought of a proposition on the part of an individual, or even a school, or a hospital to invade one of our city parks and appropriate it to its own use? Would not the answer be, This can not be done, for the park is the property of all the people of the city, and can not be despoiled for the advantage of only a part? Is it contended that our city parks are to be considered more sacred and of higher value than our national parks? The Yosemite National Park was set aside for a great pleasure ground, for a national sanatorium, for the delight, the refreshment, the recuperation of all the people of the United States. This we now hold as a sacred trust for the purposes for which it was dedicated and set aside by the Nation. It would be a gross, a base violation of our duties as trustees for the people to surrender this national trust to satisfy a selfish, mercenary, utterly unjustifiable demand.

If this action be taken upon the ground of the higher privilege of municipal demand, how will it be possible to protect any national park? What argument used to destroy Hetch Hetchy might not with equal force be urged to dam and destroy Yosemite? Will not a further demand in the near future be presented to place a dam below El Capitan, and thus make the Yosemite Valley a water tank for somebody? As they have been formed by nature twin wonders and miracles of beauty, so would Yosemite and Hetch Hetchy become twin sacrifices to exploiters and boomers. If human greed can be thus confused with human need, and a plea for the destruction of that which is most beautiful and elevating in nature be disguised as a plea for humanity, then, indeed, may we despair of both our intelligence and our civilization.

THE HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

There has been a strenuous and persistent attempt to depreciate and belittle the beauty and value of the Hetch Hetchy Valley. It is called a "barren canyon," a "craggy, inaccessible gorge," a "remote swamp infested with mosquitoes," of no particular value. It will be worth while to see just how much truth there is in these disparaging descriptions. They are made for the most part by those who have never visited the valley. We will contrast them with those who have seen it, some of them many times, and whose judgment is worthy of respect.

Mr. J. S. Chase, an English traveler and writer of note, in his book Yosemite Trails, thus describes the valley:

In general features the Hetch Hetchy is a remarkable duplication of the Yosemite. * * * There are the same clean-drawn, dome-like outlines, the same quiet beauty of winding river, the same level meadow floor, dotted with stately trees and sprinkled thickly with flowers.

Harriet Monroe, our American poet and essayist, says of it:

It is a garden of Paradise, this valley; a lesser Yosemite, but very different, with an infinitely charming individuality of its own; smaller but more compact, less grand but not less beautiful. In its wonderful forest growth, of great variety and magnificent development, it surpasses Yosemite Valley itself.

Mr. John P. Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, thus describes it:

It is about 5 miles in length between the points where the river enters the valley from the Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne to its outlet through a gorge at its western extremity, and varies in width from a mile where it is broadest to less than 300 yards in its narrowest part. * * * Except at the places where the river enters and makes its exit the valley is inclosed by ridges, bold walls and peaks that rise to a height of 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, or more than 2,000 feet above the level of the valley. * * * The Tuolumne by no means loses its beauty when it emerges from its rocky gorge to continue its course through the valley. If possible, it adds to its charms. In the summer time it meanders peacefully through the verdant meadows, hugging the base of the walls which inclose Hetch Hetchy on the north, reflecting its peaks and rocks in innumerable places. Mirror Lake, of the Yosemite, is repeated a hundred times in the reaches of this wonderful stream, whose tree-fringed banks are pictured on its glossy surface, while its pellucid depths reveal its pebbly bottom.

John Muir, who has done more, perhaps, than any other one man to preserve and make known the wonder and beauty of our national domain, says of Hetch Hetchy:

It is a wonderfully exact counterpart of the great Yosemite, not only in its crystal river and sublime rocks and waterfalls, but in the gardens, groves, and meadows of its flowery park-like floor. The walls of both are gray granite, rise abruptly out of the flowery grass and groves, are sculptured in the same style, and in both every rock is a glacial monument. * * * The Tueeulata waterfall is the most graceful I have ever seen. It excels even the Bridal Veil of the Yosemite both in height and fineness of fairy, airy beauty and behavior. * * * The Wapama waterfall is another marvel. It has a greater volume than the Yosemite Falls, is about 1,700 feet in height, and appears to be nearly vertical. It comes from a jagged, shadowy gorge, roaring and thundering, pounding its way with the weight and energy of an avalanche. * * * The Hetch Hetchy Valley is a grand landscape garden, one of nature's rarest and most precious of mountain mansions.

Prof. T. E. Matthes, of the Geological Survey, in a scientific description of the Yosemite and Hetch Hetchy Valleys, says:

These two valleys * * * possess a distinctive, if not exceptional, character that places them in a category by themselves. They may be described as deep-hewn, clean-cut moats bordered by precipitous rock walls that sharply trench across the surface of the uplands and spring abruptly from broad, level, grassy floors. Waterfalls and cascades of great height and beauty leap down into both chasms from the hanging valleys of the upland, and the cliffs themselves are sculptured into a variety of bold and picturesque forms such as are scarcely known elsewhere.

The floor of the Yosemite has an elevation of 3,960 feet, that of the Hetch Hetchy 3,660 feet. It is a sister of Yosemite. It has a similar location. What the Yosemite is to the southern or Merced half of the park, Hetch Hetchy is to the northern or Tuolumne half. It has a similar origin and has similar characteristics, yet with such differences as nature, prodigal with her power to create, delights to produce.

Many artists think Hetch Hetchy more beautiful than Yosemite. It has a more exquisite adjustment of grandeur and beauty, a more delicate shading of color, a firmer outline of boundary. It has more beautiful floral displays, disclosing new coloring with the changing seasons. It has a more beautiful forestation, being in such regard a veritable wonderland of varied and beautiful groves and forests. Its waterfalls are not so numerous, but two of them excel even those of the Yosemite in impressive beauty and grandeur.

Frederick Law Olmstead, the great landscape authority, says the beauty of such valleys consists chiefly in the contrast between the grandeur of the lofty walls and the equisite sylvan character of the floors of the valley. This is impossible to create by any skill that man can use. And there are but few such places in the world. In fact, it seems to be admitted that the Yosemite in these rare qualities is the most beautiful and perfect in the world. If this be true, then Hetch Hetchy is second, closely approaching it in surpassing loveliness, and there is no third.

DEPRECIATION.

It is this valley, this earthly paradise, this elsewhere unmatchable beauty spot, that San Francisco seeks to appropriate and destroy. And this wanton act of vandalism is sought to be justified by disparagement. This beautiful vale, sprinkled with flowers, shaded by groves, made musical by the crystal rippling of its smiling river, is called a "barren canyon," a "rocky gorge." It is "remote." But so was Yosemite until roads made it near, as they will Hetch Hetchy if it is not destroyed. It is "inaccessible." But so was Yosemite until the Government improved it, as it will Hetch Hetchy. A road of but 9 miles in length and an expenditure of $10,000 will make it, too, accessible. It is "swampy" in places. But so was Yosemite until it was drained and used. "Mosquitoes are a fearful pest." But so were they in Yosemite until the Government drove them out. Mr. E. T. Parsons, who has spent many seasons in the park, says:

I have experienced attacks of mosquitoes in the Bridal Veil Meadows, at the lower end of Yosemite Valley, that would put the Hetch Hetchy cohorts to shame.

But more than 10,000 persons now visit the Yosemite annually, the number is increasing every year, and the mosquitoes have disappeared.

It is said that in the spring the valley is flooded. But so are all mountain valleys. So is the valley of the Yosemite; so are the valleys of the Yellowstone National Park; so are the valleys of the Glacial National Park. These flood conditions are subject to control so as not to interfere with its usefulness when drainage and other improvements are carried out.

It is by such ridiculous arguments as these that the taking of Hetch Hetchy is sought to be justified.

"A BEAUTIFUL LAKE."

The proponents of this bill seek to convey the impression, first, that the Hetch Hetchy Valley will not be destroyed by damming it and, second, that it will add to the beauty of the park to thus create "a beautiful lake."

The impression is created that to dam Hetch Hetchy will cover but a portion of the valley and not necessarily destroy it as such. That impression is erroneous. The valley is small. Its level floor is only about 3½ miles long by three-fourths of a mile wide. Its walls are precipitous and rise to a great height sheer from the valley floor. It is proposed to build a dam 325 feet high. The water in the reservoir, when it is full, will be 7 miles long on its surface, 1½ miles wide, and 175 feet or more deep. There will be no level places on the steep mountain sides to view the remains. The reservoir can be seen from the mountain tops, 2,000 feet above, but the view will not be very satisfying. It was first proposed by the city to cut a scenic roadway entirely around the reservoir. But the engineering difficulties of cutting a roadway from the almost perpendicular granite walls surrounding the valley were so great and the cost so heavy that the project was abandoned, and now the city only binds itself to build a "road or trail" on the north side of the reservoir. It is scarcely necessary to say that a "trail" or bridle path will be of little practical value to anyone.

The "beautiful lake" idea seems to have removed many objections. Imaginary pictures of the valley transformed into a beautiful lake have been prepared and are being exhibited as arguments for the city's plan. It is such a nice thing to have a lake in a park and is really so expected that the proposition of San Francisco to furnish one with which to decorate the national park seems not only the proper thing but really a generous act worthy of praise and meriting instant acceptance with thanks. But the national park is full of beautiful lakes already. John Muir says there are no less than 250 within the park boundaries of sufficient size to be noted and named. There is no need of another lake in the park.

And this is not to be and can not be a lake. It is a reservoir, a "catch basin," as the chairman of the committee aptly called it. It has been properly termed a cistern, and such it would be, the rim of which would rise 2,000 feet from its contents. An artificial lake, which can be maintained at a comparatively equal fill, can be made and kept attractive in case natural lakes can not be found. But a reservoir which will be filled full to its capacity by the spring floods, which are to be stored and emptied through the long, dry, hot season until its flood store is exhausted, is not and can not be made attractive. When full the Hetch Hetchy reservoir would be 7 miles long, 1½ miles wide, and 175 feet deep. When the minimum was reached it would be an almost stagnant pond, less than 2 miles long and half a mile wide. In the hot and dry months, when the park would be most visited, it would be for the most part a ghastly mud patch, reeking with the dirty ooze of the tank, denuded of verdure, disgusting, horrible—a thing to be avoided rather than sought.

The author of the bill says:

It makes a beauty spot of what is a barren canyon to-day.

John Muir says:

As well say damming New York's Central Park would enhance its beauty.

Of the lake idea, he says:

The beautiful lake, forsooth, would be only an eyesore, a dismal blot on the landscape. The Hetch Hetchy dam lake would be but a rough imitation of a natural lake for a few of the spring months, an open mountain sepulcher the others. * * * Dam Hetch Hetchy! As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches, for no holier temple has ever been consecrated by the heart of man.

Prof. William F. Bade, of Berkeley, Cal., says:

There are scores of finer lakes in the park than this drowned valley will make, while Hetch Hetchy and Yosemite are the only mountain temples of their kind in America.

To dam the valley, he says, will make it a "monstrous municipal cistern."

Col. Biddle, chairman of the Army board, testifying for the city, was asked if the damming of Hetch Hetchy would "destroy the whole park, as assumed by some people?" His reply was, "No, sir; it would not destroy the whole park, although it would destroy a valley which is very beautiful."

There can be no disguising the fact; it would destroy the valley. If the sacrifice were necessary, it could be made. But certainly nothing less than absolute necessity would justify it.

Mr. Pinchot, also testifying for the city, speaking of the preservation of the park, said:

Here is one of the great wonders of the world, and I would leave it just as it is, so far as possible, in the Yosemite National Park.

That is the generally accepted idea of intelligent people nowadays. Few indeed can be found who would destroy the natural when it can be preserved to substitute the artificial.

PRESERVATION OF HETCH HETCHY NECESSARY FOR PARK.

It is not alone because of the destruction of the beautiful Hetch Hetchy Valley that protest is made, but because its taking will almost make of no use to the people one-half of the entire park. Just as the Yosemite is the gateway, the entrance court, the base of observation, and the center of attraction around which all the southern half of the park clusters and gravitates, so is the Hetch Hetchy Valley the portal and center from which must radiate all the interest and value of the northern half of the park. Hetch Hetchy is even more necessary and important in that regard than Yosemite, because there are more objects of interest outside the valley in the northern than in the southern part and because Hetch Hetchy is even more necessary as a condition to their observation and enjoyment.

As we have already seen, the Yosemite National Park comprises two watersheds. The Tuolumne River forms the northern and the Merced the southern, and each contains about one-half the entire area of the park, or about 500 square miles. The Yosemite is the only considerable valley in the southern part and is situated near the lower or western boundary and is the entrance and base of the southern part of the park. To it has come the railway, and from it radiate the roads and trails which make accessible and available the many objects of interest in the southern part of the park. In the valley are the hotels, the coach-line stations, the post, telegraph, and telephone offices, and the supply stores. More than 10,000 visit it each year, and the number is increasing rapidly. The Government superintendent in his last report strongly recommends the building of additional hotels and more roads and trails to answer the rapidly growing demand.

As yet the Government has not reached in its course of improvement the northern part of the park, but it is intended to do so very soon. It is needed now. The demand that its wonders and beauties shall be made available is increasing. There are 500 square miles in the southern part, and yet the officials report that it is crowded in the season. Why is this? Because, while the territory is large, it is a mountain park where valleys are few, and so available stopping and camping and resting places are few. This makes the demand for the opening and improvement of the northern part, and this demand does not come from the despised "nature lovers" alone. It comes from the tired workers of the hot and dry valleys, from the nerve-wrecked toilers of the cities, from the travelers from the lands beyond the sea who have heard of the marvels of this wonderland and desire to see and know them.

And that is one of the reasons why the Hetch Hetchy Valley is so valuable and should be preserved. Just as the Yosemite Valley is the gateway to the southern part of the park, so is Hetch Hetchy the gateway to the northern part. It, too, is near the lower western boundary. It, too, is the only practical portal and base and center for the entire northern part of the park. Here in this valley is the only practical location for hotels, stations, and offices. From this valley should radiate and center the roads and trails to make accessible the wonders of the northern part of the park. Just as from the Yosemite Valley Mount Star King, the Tenaya Lake and Canyon, Wawona, and the Big Trees, and Cathedral Park are made accessible and available, so would Lakes Eleanor, Vernon, and Tilden, the Tiltill Valley, the Tuolumne Canyon, the Matterhorn, the Tuolumne Meadows and the circle of great mountain peaks surrounding it, and the hundreds of other special objects of interest and beauty be made available from Hetch Hetchy. But this can not be done if it is converted into a reservoir.

Just as the development of the Valley of the Merced—named Yosemite—was first necessary to make a base for bringing all its related and adjacent wonders and beauties under observation and availability, so will the development and improvement of the Valley of the Tuolumne—named Hetch Hetchy—be first necessary to make a base for bringing all the more than 500 square miles of adjacent and related wonder and beauties within the reach of the people. And just as to dam and destroy the Yosemite would make the entire southern part of the park of little interest or use, so would the destruction of Hetch Hetchy make the entire northern part of the park of little use or benefit.

WHAT SANITARY CONTROL MEANS.

But not only is the northern part of the park made unavailable by reason of the importance of Hetch Hetchy Valley as a center and base, but the entire northern part of the park, the entire 500 square miles which form the watershed of the Tuolumne, and which is tributary to the Hetch Hetchy Valley, is made a sanitary district of San Francisco, and that city is given sanitary control of all the northern half of the national park. Restrictions are made as to the use of "any reservoir or stream" and over camps and hotels "within the watershed."

In the rules proposed for the sanitation of the watershed by Mr. Alen Hazen and Mr. George C. Whipple, the distinguished sanitary experts, provision was made that no refuse or garbage should be placed in the waters of any reservoir or stream, or within 50 feet thereof. This was the provision of the bill when originally introduced, when it was considered by the Government officials and approved by the committee. In some way the requirement has been changed, and instead of 50 feet the distance is made 300 feet. The effect of this is to make the great Tuolumne Canyon impossible of exploration or observation. It prohibits the use of the greater part of the Tuolumne Meadows. It makes it practically impossible to explore or tour the entire Tuolumne watershed, over 500 square miles in extent, or the larger part of the entire national park. The reason for this is that at most points the walls of the wonderful Tuolumne Canyon are less than 300 feet from the river. In the beautiful Alpine valley, known as the Tuolumne Meadows, the camping places and outfitting stations are near the streams. In the entire northern part of the park the valleys are narrow and there are very few level places that can be found within them 300 feet from a stream. Nearly all the little lakes—and there are hundreds of them—are directly or indirectly the sources of streams which flow into the Tuolumne River, and thence into Hetch Hetchy Valley; and all must be subject to these sanitary regulations.

It is supposed by many that the Hetch Hetchy Valley alone is affected by this bill. This is, indeed, a great mistake. Sanitary supervision is equivalent to control. In effect the passage of this bill will transfer the jurisdiction of the northern half of the park from the United States to the city of San Francisco. Hereafter the southern half of the park will be administered for park purposes, and within its precincts the people will be invited. But the northern part of the park will be conserved as a water supply for San Francisco, and within that watershed the people will not be welcome. In whatever degree the United States shall assist in the policing and protection of that part of the park, it will be primarily in the interest of San Francisco to enforce sanitary regulations to protect its water supply.

San Francisco assumes the burden of enforcing its sanitary regulations. In what measure and to what extent it is proposed that the city shall assume control over the park for that purpose the bill does not make clear. But surely it could not be thought that San Francisco desires to impose on the General Government the protection of its water supply. Assuming that nothing so unreasonable is proposed, then it follows that San Francisco must police the entire watershed, embracing a territory of 500 square miles. Assuming also, as the city is so anxious to claim, that the people will go into the northern part of the park after Hetch Hetchy is dammed, it follows as a necessary consequence that it will require an army of policemen to protect it. A national park is vastly different from a national forest reserve. If San Francisco should go to a national forest reserve, as did Los Angeles, to either the Eel River, McCloud River, or Mokelumne, or others where their source of supply would be within forest reserves, protection would be an easy matter, for within a forest reserve the people are not invited. The policy is exclusion. But within a national park the exact opposite is true. The policy is inducement, invitation, even solicitation. Within a national forest reserve the less it is used the more it serves the object of its establishment. With a national park, the more it is used the more it serves the purpose for which it was set aside.

Keeping in mind that San Francisco is to spend millions in securing this water supply, what must be her policy? Will it be to encourage, to invite the people to come within the watershed and contaminate its water supply? On the contrary, will not its interests demand a policy of exclusion? By the mere manner in which the city shall enforce its sanitary provisions it can exclude visitors from the northern part of the park. The people will not go for pleasure where it is made unpleasant for them. They will not go for rest where constant nagging is probable.

It must seem evident that the purpose of a water supply is utterly inconsistent with that of a national park. It will be continually and increasingly to the interest of San Francisco to keep people away from the watershed. Most experts hold that it is necessary either to have entire exclusion or else filtration to insure sanitation. The people of Portland, Oreg., would not be satisfied with anything less than the absolute exclusion of everybody from the watershed of their Bull Run water supply, and so they secured from Congress an act to that effect.

If an epidemic of typhoid should occur in San Francisco it would be at once attributed to its unprotected water supply and there would come a clamor for exclusion. It is claimed that the reservoir may be used for boating and the mountains and waterfalls around Hetch Hetchy observed from motor boats and canoes. Of course there is no provision in the bill to that effect. The unauthorized statement is only intended for pictorial purposes. Imagine what the people of San Francisco would say and do if they were informed that banana peels and cigar stumps were being thrown into its unfiltered water supply.

It is true that the bill provides that no further restrictions shall be demanded, and if further protection is needed it will filter. But its objection to filtration now is the cost. The city claims it will cost $10,500,000 to filter its water supply. Which will be the cheaper for it, filtration or exclusion? San Francisco will demand exclusion in the name of the ten millions it will save, in the name of the women and children who are dying because Congress does not listen to their cry, in the interest of the conservation of human life and the general cause of humanity. They will say then, just as they say now, "Your park is big enough without it. You have got the Yosemite Valley and what do you want with more? Nobody will object except a few 'nature lovers,' and there is only a few of them, anyway."

And there will be stronger reasons then existing for the passage of an act of exclusion than now exists for the passage of this act. It will be argued that Congress must have known that exclusion would finally be demanded. To think of granting a tract of land for a water supply and then expecting to use it as a pleasure resort subject to constant danger of infection will be said to be ridiculous. With this view, Mr. J. Horace McFarland, president of the American Civic Association, testified: "The whole valley which is tributary to Hetch Hetchy, every single foot of it, must be given to San Francisco," unless Congress means to "give away a means of poisoning San Francisco."

It is not an unreasonable apprehension nor an unjustifiable statement which is made by John Muir and others that the passage of this bill means the absolute destruction for park purposes of one-half the national park. If the watershed is protected by the city under the provisions of this bill, or if exclusion is hereafter secured, in either case its usefulness for park purposes is destroyed. Ex-Mayor Phelan says San Francisco will do the park "no violence. She will treat it fairly." Imagine some future Mayor Schmidt, or Boss Ruef, or sand-lot politicians through their superintendent and employees administering this beautiful trust! Their characteristic hunger for the quiet of the forest and the grandeur of the mountains, their appreciation and love of the beautiful, will indicate what is meant by municipalizing Yosemite. Even under present conditions an indication of the attitude of the city authorities and of what may be expected of them is shown by the change in the bill by which an exclusion of 50 feet, deemed ample by their own sanitary experts, is changed to 300 feet, presumably to better please the city.

WHAT GOES WITH HETCH HETCHY.

It will not be without value to mention some of the other wonders and beauties besides Hetch Hetchy which the people will surrender to San Francisco if this bill is passed.

The Tuolumne Canyon deserves to be ranked among the greatest natural wonders of the earth, say naturalists who have explored it. It is second only in size and grandeur to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and in some respects excels it. It can be made more easily observable, for the Colorado canyon is in some places 15 miles wide, while this is but 1¼. The canyon is only about 22 miles long, but the fall is nearly 5,200 feet. In other words, it falls a mile in a continuous succession of cascades and cataracts. For a long time it was considered impassable, and now is only traversed with difficulty, requiring about four days for the trip. Yet it can be made easily passable unless the blocking of its lower outlet is accomplished by the damming of Hetch Hetchy. In places the walls rise in terraced or almost vertical precipices to heights of 5,000 feet.

Joseph Clement, regimental chaplain of the United States Army, says that to dam Hetch Hetchy would shut out the public from the canyon through which the Government contemplates building a trail when it reaches improvements in that portion of the park. Describing this absolutely unique and almost unknown attraction of the park, he says:

> The wonders of the canyon can not be described to others in words. We looked up at peaks 5,000 feet in height and saw some of the most beautiful waterfalls and cascades in the world. Stella Falls, Le Conte Falls, and Muir Canyon are in the midst of scenery which surpasses anything in the Yosemite or any or all of the places in that wonderful park.

At the entrance or upper end of this canyon is the splendid alpine valley, known as the Tuolumne Meadows. The term "meadows," bestowed by hunters and prospectors who first christened it, does not indicate its real nature. It is a beautiful mountain valley in which the Tuolumne receives its hundred tributaries before it plunges into the canyon and through it to Hetch Hetchy. It lies high up among the crests of the Sierras at an altitude of 8,500 feet, or nearly a mile higher than the floor of the Yosemite and Hetch Hetchy Valleys. Down from the heights of Mount Dana, Lyell, Ritter, Conness, and dozens of other lordly peaks, fed by their thousand glaciers and flooded by their eternal snows, come these mountain torrents through deep gorges carved through solid granite, leaping precipices, with shouts of thunderous laughter or singing lullabys among the pines and ferns. Threading their way quietly after they have reached the meadows through fields of lush grass, among flowery meads which extend for miles, through fragrant groves of tamarack and fir and pine, they join the Tuolumne on its mad excursion through the canyon.

This valley is not only a spacious region of enchantment and delight, but it is the only resting place and vantage ground to see and explore the great mountains surrounding it. It is the only available camping ground and outfitting station in this region. It is crossed by important trails leading to Mona Pass, to Donohue Pass, to Levining Pass, to Tuolumne Pass, to Tuolumne Canyon, and to the Yosemite by the Sunrise Trail and the Tioga Road. It is the point from which to view and visit Cathedral Peak, Unicorn, Rafferty, McClure, Lyell, the Kuna Crest, Mount Gibbs, Dana, and Conness—in short, the greatest and most glorious mountains in the park.

Mr. E. T. Parsons, a frequent visitor, says of it:

> For 20 miles the verdant meadows studded with countless flowers follow the sparkling river. Groves of beautiful trees are scattered here and there, as if for the express purpose of making ideal camping grounds. Trout are abundant, the pasture is the best in the Sierras, the delicious mineral springs near Lamberts Dome are alone enough attraction for thousands of visitors. Above all, the clear, bright, unbroken sunshine of a California summer, the invigorating air, cooled by the myriads of snowy peaks surrounding, makes it a paradise for man.

And this, too, is to be surrendered to the supervision and control of San Francisco.

But these by no means exhaust the list of the attractions of the northern part of the park. Mr. Allen Chamberlain, in an article in the Outlook magazine, says:

> I do not hesitate to declare that the scenic beauty of the country north of Hetch Hetchy is fit to rank with the finest mountain scenery in the country. Once the public is allowed a glimpse into the Tuolumne River watershed, with its sunny and hospitable meadows, its wide-spreading forests, its great snow peaks, innumerable lovely lakes, and majestic canyons the clamor for its development will be irresistible.
> "NATURE LOVERS."

I presume these words of description and praise can have but little effect on the advocates of this bill. In every speech and reference they have nothing but contempt and scorn for the "nature lovers." And yet the most serene intelligences and greatest minds the world has ever known have been "nature lovers." Indeed, it may be truly said that there is no truer test of that which is most elevated and noble in humanity than the appreciation and love of nature.

In a plea for the enlargement and preservation of our national parks, Mr. James Bryce, while he was yet ambassador, said:

> The love of nature is the very simplest and best of those pleasures the power of enjoying which has been implanted in us. * * * A taste for natural beauty is increasing, and, as we hope, will go on increasing. The places of scenic beauty do not increase, but, on the contrary, are in danger of being reduced in number and diminished in quantity. There is no better service we can render to the masses of the people than to preserve for them wide spaces of fine scenery for their delight. * * * Let us think of the future. We are trustees of the future. We are not here for ourselves alone. All these gifts were not given us to be used by our generation or with the thought of one generation only before our minds. We are the heirs of those who have gone before and charged with a duty to those who come after, and there is no duty which seems clearer or higher than that of handing on to them undiminished facilities for the enjoyment of some of the best gifts that the Creator has seen fit to bestow upon His children.

It is not the æsthete or the dilettante who really loves nature. Neither is beauty hunger confined to the rich and cultivated. It is shown in the modest window garden or the broken cups of the poor where a few geranium slips are grown and watched with loving care. It is not because of the demand of the rich that every city in the land is building spacious city parks and botanical gardens. It is because of the demand for fresh air, for the welcome shade, for the green grass and the open spaces, and an uninterrupted view of the sky and the stars, that comes from the poor. The nerve-wrecked worker in the clanging factories, the tired and weary seamstress from the tenement shops, the sick and suffering children whose eyes brighten at sight of a flower—these are the real "nature lovers."

Indeed, not to love the beauty of the sky and sea, of forest and flower, is to be defective or deformed. The highest types of humanity are those who stand nearest nature and love her most, who open their eyes to her beauty and their hearts to her ennobling influence. It was Emerson who said, "Not in nature, but in man is all the beauty and worth he sees"—that is, the beauty and worth in nature can not be known by those souls which are not large enough to contain them.

Were it not for our increasing intelligence and our growing appreciation of the sublime and the beautiful we should not have established our national parks. We have realized their use and value in the generation in which we live, and we have realized of what inestimable worth they will be to the generations yet to come. "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," sang Keats, and the verse has sunk so deeply into the consciousness of the world that it has become a proverb for all peoples. In what supreme measure is the saying true in this case. As the years go on, as intelligence increases, as civilization advances, as man's appreciation and love of the sublime and beautiful enlarges, this park preserved as God made it will be indeed "a joy forever."

Really, gentlemen who sneer at "nature lovers" do not mean what their disparagement might imply. They are all themselves "nature lovers." All men not congenitally defective are. Even the savage, without understanding his impression, looks with pleasure on a beautiful landscape. Exactly in the measure in which intelligence is developed and civilization advances does this appreciation and love increase. The man or woman whose broad culture and enlightened humanitarianism takes the most exalted form seeks most and loves best "communion with her visible form."

THE HIGHEST CONSERVATION.

It is strongly urged that the highest conservation is use, and that domestic use is first to be considered. It is asserted in every form of phrase that to sacrifice utility for beauty is merely an effeminate, sentimental view. Every statement and proposition of this kind made could be admitted and still San Francisco could not be justified in asking the Government to sacrifice Hetch Hetchy. The argument has no weight or force unless the alternative exists—either the sacrifice of Hetch Hetchy or of human life in San Francisco. But no such alternative exists. San Francisco is not required to go to Hetch Hetchy or suffer for water; there are half a dozen other places to which it can go. It is not a case of dire necessity, requiring the sacrifice of one of the most wonderful of nature's masterpieces in order to save human life. What is really asked is to sacrifice the priceless marvel to save San Francisco some money. To Congress the proposition is, Will we allow an invasion of a national park, a phenomenal natural treasure house and one of the few wonders of the world, in order—not to relieve San Francisco's distress, but to save it a few dollars?

There are many who support this bill in the sincere belief that at some time Hetch Hetchy must be dammed and used by somebody, and that we might as well dispose of it now as later.

But it should be remembered that the Nation has set aside but few of such places for preservation—certainly no more than a reasonable policy demands. There are many available water and power sites on Government lands and within national-forest reserves against the proper use of which there can be no objection. But to thus use a national park is to utterly destroy its usefulness as such, and there is not another Hetch Hetchy in the land or in the world.

It should also be remembered that the same reasons would justify the damming and destruction of the Yosemite Valley and, in fact, all valleys in all our parks. It certainly can not be necessary to destroy all the beautiful things in the world on the plea that they must be utilized. Rather should it be recognized that such a definition of utility is too narrow. Dishwashing is not the only use for water, nor lumber for trees, nor pasture for grass. It is as real, as true, a utility if all these are preserved and combined, for the curing of tired minds and bodies, for the soothing of racked nerves, and for the solace of the sorrowing.

In this instance, too, the sacrifice can not be considered necessary on the ground of utility. The material benefits of the water can be obtained in the irrigation of the land to which it belongs and without the destruction of Hetch Hetchy.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

It is said by the proponents of this bill that the city of San Francisco now owns a large part of the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, that it already owns a part of the dam site, and has title to other lands within the national park. This it has acquired in order to strengthen its claim against the Government. It hardly comes with good grace from the holder of adverse interests to parade them as claims for favor. To strengthen its claim against the Government the city even went so far as to have its then mayor, Mr. Phelan, file claims in his individual capacity as a private claimant. To buy up these private claims, every one of which was in opposition to the interests of the Government which was trying to settle them, was a hostile and unfriendly act. Every claim purchased has been to hinder and embarrass the Government in its beneficent purpose in the establishment of the park for the use of the people.

The position of claimants to lands within a Government park is not well established, but most of it is pure bluff, and much of it, like Phelan's claims, apparent fraud. Referring to those private claims, the superintendent of the park, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, says:

> There are approximately 20,000 acres of timber and homestead claims in the park. * * * The only patented lands now retained are timber claims and a few claims that were taken up under the homestead act and were never occupied as homesteads, but simply used as a pretext for bringing in stock to stray upon the park lands. These private lands are no longer of any value to their owners, as there is not sufficient grazing on them to keep half a dozen animals during the summer.

It is by pressing this sort of claims that San Francisco seeks to force the Government of the United States to accede to its demands. The superintendent strongly urges that the Government buy or condemn these worthless claims, and this it will of course do when it gets ready. Then San Francisco will be paid for her purchases if they be found to have any value.

PAYMENT FOR POWER.

It is argued that San Francisco proposes to pay the Government a good price for what it gets. It is provided in the bill that the city shall build certain roads and trails and after a while pay the Government an annual rental for the privilege of developing and using the water power.

Regarding the roads, it is stated that they will make available those sections of the park now rarely visited, and thus add to its value. It is only necessary to say that the Government can and will build these roads and make other necessary improvements without outside aid. It is not bankrupt; it is the richest and most prosperous nation in the world, and it can take care of its own property in what manner and at such time as it sees fit. There has never been and there never will be any protest or objection on the part of the people to the improvement of our national parks.

It is further provided in the bill that, beginning at the end of a 5-year period—which it is assumed will be required to construct the dam—San Francisco is to pay $15,000 annually for the first 10 years, $20,000 for the second 10 years, and $30,000 annually thereafter. The rental is to be used for the improvement of the national parks in California. Again, it may be said the Government does not ask for or need aid in the improvement of its parks. But as a purely business proposition the amount offered should be refused, as it is grossly inadequate.

The value of Hetch Hetchy dammed for the development of hydroelectric energy is fixed by the board at $45,000,000. It will develop 115,000 horsepower, which, at $20 per year, would be worth $2,300,000. But there are many who think it will be worth $30 per horsepower, which would make an annual return of $3,450,000. In other words, it is proposed to give San Francisco property that will command an annual return of $3,450,000 for from $15,000 to $30,000. Besides it is proposed to give it in addition 400,000,000 gallons of water daily for nothing.

It is not too much to say that never in the history of this country has the Government been asked to give away a right so great for a consideration so small. A distinguished member of the majority declared during the debate in the House:

> You are going to create one of the greatest water-power possibilities that was ever created in the United States. * * * The income derived from this proposition is going to be commensurate, when it is under full headway and in full operation, to the income of the Panama Canal.

There will be, however, this tremendous difference, that while the income of the Panama Canal will all go to the United States, the income from this proposition will all go to the corporation which receives the franchise, except a paltry $30,000.

But this ought not to be considered as a money deal. It is not. We have set aside this park for the use of the people. It is not for sale. Its use ought not to be purchased. It is, or should be, forever removed from exploitation. It should be kept and held sacred, devoted to the high purpose for which it was intended.

It is proposed in this bill that the city can not sell water or power to any corporation or individual to sell or sublet. But it is not provided that the city may not sell to any corporation it chooses all the water or electric energy it desires for its own use. Especially as regards the sale of power this is a great opportunity for fraud and graft. With a corrupt administration, or even a weak one, corporations can obtain favorable concessions, new projects could be instituted based on favoritism, by which competition can be controlled, lower rates for political influence; in these and many other ways the opportunity and temptation is open for unlimited corruption and abuse.

It is urged that in effect the bill is a proposition for developing power under municipal and governmental supervision, which is to be furnished to the people at cost. The bill does not so provide. In order to effect a compromise with the people of the Turlock and Modesto irrigation districts, they are granted the right to purchase at cost surplus power for pumping and municipal purposes. But such provision is for them alone. The city can sell at a profit or at a loss, or at any price, all the power it does not see fit to use itself to any corporation or individual desiring to purchase it. If commercial motives control, prices and terms may be arranged to induce use and obtain profits. If political motives govern, privileges will be granted where they will do the most good.

MR. PINCHOT AND SOME OTHERS.

The supporters of this bill are fond of parading lists of prominent persons who it is alleged are supporting this bill. Some of these are not now supporting this bill and never have supported it. Some are named as supporters of the bill who admit they have given the matter no attention or study. Others are supporting the bill for reasons not difficult to understand.

Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, declares he favors this bill. It is to be expected that he would. He is a citizen of San Francisco, and that city is his home. Besides, he appeared and has acted as attorney and adviser of the city in its efforts to obtain this concession before he was appointed to his present position. As against his indorsement, which can not be considered impartial, is the fact that three Secretaries of the Interior preceding him have refused to approve the project—Secretaries Hitchcock, Ballinger, and Fisher. Secretary Garfield only approved of it on the condition that Lake Eleanor and Cherry Creek should prove insufficient, which condition he believed and which almost certainly would have amply protected Hetch Hetchy.

Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, is quoted as approving the bill. What is construed as approval is probably his statement, "I am advised by those immediately in charge of the service that the bill adequately protects the forests with which I immediately have to deal." A small part of the water supply contemplated by the bill is to be obtained from Cherry Creek, which is outside the national park, and within the Stanislaus National Forest Reserve. The national parks are subject to the supervision of the Interior Department, while the national forest reserves are under the control of the Department of Agriculture. The bill certainly will not injure a forest reserve.

Hon. Gifford Pinchot has given his unqualified indorsement of this bill. It is certain that this indorsement of the great conservationist carries great weight and has had large influence in securing support for this bill. And yet slight reflection would have induced the conclusion that Mr. Pinchot's approval was only what might have been expected. Mr. Pinchot is our first, our greatest, forester. He is primarily interested in forest reserves and not in national parks. He is a conservationist of forests and not of scenery. There is a fundamental difference between national parks and national forest reserves. To the parks the public is invited. Inducements are offered for the people to come. But to the forest reserves the public is not invited. A policy of exclusion is best adapted for forest preservation. Every visitor is a danger. Every camper is a menace. There is no doubt Mr. Pinchot is logical in supporting this bill. By its passage more than 500 square miles of national-park territory will be transferred, in effect, from a national park to a forest reserve. A policy of exclusion will best protect San Francisco's water supply and Mr. Pinchot's trees.

It is known, of course, that Mr. Pinchot is greatly interested in extending the national power, especially with regard to the control of water-power rights within the States, and the provisions of the present bill by which the General Government receives payment for water-power rights is in accordance with his ideas on that subject. But the principle for which he contends is not necessarily involved in this bill. Back of the question as to whether the Nation or the State should control a water power granted is the question of the grant. If the franchise ought not to be granted at all, then the dependent proposition becomes unnecessary to consider. It is contended by most of those who oppose this bill that the national parks must not be exploited at all by anybody at any time or on any terms.

But these considerations should not have induced Mr. Pinchot's approval of this bill. He should understand that it is the most dangerous attack on conservation that has been made in recent years. He should understand that every enemy of conservation in the unfriendly West is favoring this bill; that every private interest that desires to invade and exploit a national park, a forest reserve, or any portion of the Government's unclassified domain is hoping for the passage of this bill; that if a municipal corporation can defeat the Government's purpose a private corporation can do so; that those who desire to save the national parks are endeavoring to defeat their invasion by any corporation or individual, public or private, in the interest of all the people as against a special privilege for a few—and that is what we understand Mr. Pinchot has made his life's ambition and desire. Mr. Pinchot should be first among the defenders of Yosemite instead of its assailant. That he is not so is a great disappointment and regret to those who are his friends.

Other names are given as supporters of this bill. But for every one thus given it is safe to say that ten equally or more distinguished could be given as opposing the measure. The press with practical unanimity all over the country denounce the proposition as a grab and a steal. Nearly all the societies and associations who have considered it have passed resolutions against it. For 12 years San Francisco has persisted in her attempt to induce or compel the National Government to relinquish Hetch Hetchy to it, but so far without success. As soon as the facts are known and the real conditions understood there follows an almost certain condemnation of the proposition.

That this is really the view taken by the people is strikingly shown by a statement made by a Senator in debate on this bill, who said:

> Senators in this body, Representatives in the other House of Congress, and public officials in Washington are receiving thousands and thousands of letters from people throughout the country protesting against the passage of this bill.

If that be true, it is an indication of the public desire, and a strong reason why the bill ought not to pass.

TRUE INTERESTS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The true interests of both San Francisco and California are against the passage of this bill. Even the people of San Francisco are beginning to understand the folly, the worse than folly, of the policy pursued by a handful of men who have been managing the city's campaign for Hetch Hetchy. Speculative and chimerical schemes for obtaining power so that the city could experiment in running its street cars and furnish and sell light and power have been responsible for this. A long fight with the present private "monopoly" was to be won in the interest of the people by obtaining Hetch Hetchy. Deprivation and even suffering because of an insufficient water supply was deliberately allowed to continue so that the people could be induced to believe it could only be cured by the procurement of Hetch Hetchy. Thus the people were led to believe Hetch Hetchy was the one indispensable requisite to an adequate and suitable water supply. How far from the truth this really is we have already seen.

The facts are beginning to be understood, even by the people of San Francisco. And when they finally realize what an absurd and almost impossible proposition it is to secure a water supply from a national park, when they understand that a joint supervision in the interest of the city which desires exclusion, and the Government whose object in the establishment of a national park is to invite the people to come and stay, and that this must inevitably lead to complications, conflicts of jurisdiction, litigation, and constant embarrassment and trouble, when they further understand that from the moment the bill becomes a law, if it ever does, litigation between the irrigationists of the San Joaquin Valley and the city is certain, and conflicts of State and national jurisdiction and laws are directly involved—when these things are understood, as they will be, the people will wish they had gone elsewhere so that all these complications could have been avoided.

It is believed that a realization of these facts is likely to occur to at least many of the people of the city. But it is stated in the press that a certain political group in the city has become so obsessed with the idea of obtaining Hetch Hetchy that they can not give it up except by a sacrifice of their political vanity. It may and probably will turn out that they do not more truly represent the wishes and interests of the people of that city than did those who assumed to represent the interests of the water users in the Turlock and Modesto districts. It is openly stated that the city's attorneys admit that if the grant of the valley is secured from Congress years of litigation will result. Mr. O'Shaughnessy, the present city engineer, is quoted as saying a year ago that the Hetch Hetchy project was "a hideous blunder," but that the city had gone so far it could not back out.

Why has not San Francisco done as Los Angeles has done, which on the 5th and 6th of this month celebrated the completion of its great water system? It went a distance of 260 miles for its water supply at a cost of $26,000,000. It has taken eight years to complete the project, which will furnish 260,000,000 gallons daily and develop 47,000 horsepower. But it did not invite opposition and litigation and disaster by attempting to invade a national park. It went to a national forest reserve, where San Francisco should go. There is a choice of at least three open to the city, two of which will develop more horsepower than Los Angeles will obtain; one of them 95,000,000, and any of which will furnish as much water as the city can use for a century, and of as good quality as Los Angeles has obtained.

CALIFORNIA'S MISTAKE AND SHAME.

Still more would it prove a colossal blunder for California to aid in its own spoliation and shame. It would be a disastrous financial policy to aid San Francisco in an endeavor to save, as it claims, $20,000,000, and by so doing reduce the productive capacity of the State $20,000,000 a year for all time by depriving one of its fertile valleys of the water to which it is entitled and without which 200,000 acres of its land must remain an arid waste. It is a still more serious blunder to surrender the State's right to control its own waters for the use of its own people and to welcome an invasion of national power in contravention of those rights which it has jealously guarded for nearly a century. National power once exercised is like the camel's head under the tent; it is soon followed by exclusive occupancy.

Years ago California received the Yosemite Valley in trust for the people. It kept it until 1906, when it receded it to the National Government. By its voluntary act it relinquished every claim it had in the park. Even the people of California will admit that it is a most fortunate thing both for California and the rest of the Nation that the General Government is in control of that supreme pleasure ground and wonderland. Not only is California relieved of the burden of its improvement and maintenance, but the place is dignified and brought into true prospective by this national recognition of its worth and beauty. Nothing can deprive California, however, of the glory that the Yosemite, the wonder and admiration of the world, is hers, is within her boundaries, and can not be dissociated from her name.

None realize better than Californians that there is a money value in the preservation of her natural beauties and wonders. The climate and scenery of California are famed all around the world. These have been the attractions that have drawn thousands of permanent citizens and hundreds of millions of dollars to the upbuilding and enrichment of the State. California should be first to stand in defense of its priceless, God-given treasures. It should be the last to see them sacrificed.

OF

HON. WILLIAM GORDON,

OF OHIO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, November 26, 1913.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert an address delivered by the Hon. Harvey D. Goulder, at Cleveland, Ohio, upon the subject of "Commerce on the Great Lakes."

The address is as follows:

THE GREAT LAKES.

[Response by Harvey D. Goulder, at the International Marine Congress, held at Cleveland June 10, 1912.]

Permissible time is so brief for the subject that I may only bluntly give some figures which I beg you do not take as in any spirit of boastfulness, but rather that in economic questions, public or of the family, the exponent "X" or "Y" may, with the same dignity, represent one or one thousand. I can only in some general way indicate how we are endeavoring to solve problems on the Great Lakes in transportation, which throughout the world is the basis of commerce, as that is the fundamental of civilization and of modern life. However we may idealize or divine, all would be whistling against the wind unless sustained by earnest practical efforts in commerce.

Ours has been comparatively a recent development. Fix in mind that later than 1805 the only commercial vessel then on Lake Erie was taken overland around Niagara Falls to Lake Ontario, because there was not business for her above. Following the opening of the Erie Canal in 1826 and of others through Ohio and Pennsylvania, commercial movement started first up the Lakes in farm products, breadstuffs, provisions, and manufactures, until about 1840, when the trend began to turn eastward. By that year Chicago had attained a population of 4,470 and Cleveland 6,071. In 1855 the barrier between Lake Superior and the lower Lakes was broken by canal and locks to overcome the drop of 18 feet. By 1866 the Federal Government had spent but $3,000,000 in improvement of channels and harbors of the Great Lakes. The start began with draft of less than 10 feet in some narrow, restricted reaches of the natural waterway, and even less in some of the later developed great harbors. The original Welland Canal around Niagara Falls carried 7½ feet draft.

Full details are readily accessible in official statistics, but, speaking broadly, beginning in 1855 with 14,500 tons carried through the Sault Canal, we reached sixty-two and one-half million tons dead weight of cargo through that canal in the season of 1910, fell off somewhat in the business depression of 1911, and have started to strongly exceed 1910 in the present season.

Demands of the iron industry called for ore from the rich treasury in the Lake Superior region, which furnished in 1910 more than 42,000,000 tons, more than 80 per cent of all the raw material in the production of our pig iron of over twenty-seven and a quarter million tons. Nearly all came down by lake, approximately two-thirds to ports of Ohio, now the fifth industrial State of the Union. Of total tonnage of every description documented under our flag June 30, 1911, nearly 40 per cent and of metal—the more modern and efficient working tonnage—about 55 per cent were engaged on the Great Lakes, practically directed at and from Cleveland, where force of controlling circumstances fixed the head and administrative center of direction for this commerce, which in ton-mileage service performed reaches more than 25 per cent of that by the railroads of the United States, at a cost of sixty-seven one-hundredths of a mill per ton-mile in 1911, to be somewhat reduced for 1912, a cost less than 10 per cent of the average rail cost in the United States and perhaps not exceeding 20 per cent of cost by the most favored railroad of this or of any country. It is common belief that 50,000,000 tons of ore, averaging quite 55 per cent on dry analysis in metallic iron, will come down the Lakes this season, and movement of grain, coal, lumber, and other commodities to an equal amount is predicted. In this service the largest ship can carry 14,000 tons on a draft of less than 20 feet; she is 614 feet long, 64 feet beam, 33 feet molded depth.

The freight rate of some 70 years ago approximated $80 a ton to the East, $100 westward. I recall an old case based on a freight rate in about 1873 from Escanaba to Buffalo of $7.50 a ton; the current rate is 25 cents net to the ship.

You have been solving just such problems by increasing channels and harbors, size of ships, canalizing and prodigious advance in terminal facilities and cargo-handling machinery, so you are bound to be interested in a word about how we have worked along similar lines. May we instance that in the 25 years from 1885 to 1910, speaking of traffic through the Sault Canal, we accomplished a reduction in cost of 75 per cent, and so an increase from three and a quarter millions to sixty-two and a half million tons dead weight of cargoes; having in mind, if you please, some thirty-six millions published for the Suez in the latter year and the estimate of some eleven millions for the Panama after 10 years of operation; and in this connection the Sault Canal traffic represents a possible two-thirds of the freight movement on the Lakes.

I may only detain you to give briefly some figures. The first steam barge, which marked the evolution from sail to steam on the Lakes, was the R. J. Hackett in 1869. She was 211 feet length, 32 feet beam, 20 feet 5 inches depth, with engines aft, the prototype of the modern bulk freighter of the Lakes, and on draft of water then available carried something over 1,000 tons. One of the latest ships launched is the William P. Snyder, jr., 614 feet length, 64 feet beam, 33 feet molded depth, capacity on present available draft about 12,000 tons, and on less than 20 feet draft, 14,000 tons. Again, the average cargo in 1895 was 1,800 tons, increased to 8,325 tons in 1908, although since somewhat reduced by some lowering of water and conditions which I may not stop to consider. A comparison is at hand covering the operation of the record ship in 1891 in contrast with the record ship of 1909, as follows:

Number of trips	26	26
Number of crew	23	25
Days in commission	205	225
Average size of cargo	2,164	10,940
Average draft of water through Sault Canal.....feet..	14.2	19.2
Average time loading port.....hours..	4.5	19
Average time unloading port.....do....	12	14
Average labor cost per day	$50	$66.15
Average wages per man per day	$2.17	$2.88
Total freight carried during season.....tons..	58,437	285,000
Gross earnings per ton of freight carried	$1.09	$0.69
Operating expenses per ton of freight carried	$0.89	$0.417
Cost of construction	$200,000	$420,000

Since 1902 more than 250 steel steamers have been built, only one under 400 feet in length (except a few for the Welland Canal trade), ranging in carrying capacity from 4,800 to 14,000 tons; more than 100 of these over 500 feet in length, from 8,000 to over 10,000 tons; and 25 over 600 feet, with 12,000 tons or more carrying capacity.

How our ships are constructed, with a clear hold to accommodate loading, and especially unloading machinery; description of the development up to 17 tons of the mechanical "grabber" for unloading; of the car dumper in general use for loading into the ship a car up to 100 tons of bituminous coal in from scant two to three minutes, with minimum breakage; of the growth of terminal facilities and loading and unloading appliances generally for these things, and all this part of the story I may not take time. You have or will have seen it all for yourselves. But I may not properly close without giving you succinctly the record of what we have attained for the essential feature of loading and discharging bulk cargoes of iron ore, coal, and grain. I am giving you probably the best but actual figures of working time. Iron ore, a cargo of 10,000 gross tons, loaded in 25 minutes, discharged in 3 hours and 15 minutes; grain, a cargo of 320,000 bushels of wheat, loaded in 2 hours and 40 minutes, discharged inside of 12 hours; coal, cargo of 10,800 tons, loaded from cars on the track into the ship in five and a half hours, discharged in 13 hours.

You will see from this hurried sketch how we are working out this problem of cheap water transportation, taking advantage of nature's generous provision. What the future growth will be no prudent man will say. The story of it up to now reads like romance. We have had aid of the Government to something over $100,000,000 for channels, breakwaters, and harbor work. From the early day of Gen. Weitzel we have had remarkable aid from the Engineer Corps to assist and guide, not strangely, because there is something about it all which attracts and appeals to the engineer, whose most cherished reward comes through triumph over obstacles accompanied with achievement of valuable results. Gen. Poe, to whom we owe so much, designed the Poe lock at the Sault, 800 by 100 feet, to accommodate in one locking four of the largest ships ever to be in service on the Great Lakes, only to find on its completion in 1896 that even two of the largest could not be locked through together. He said:

> Surely such a commerce deserves every aid and encouragement that can be extended to them. Given a channel of 20 feet draft and it needs no prophet to predict a still more wonderful growth. Nearly 35 years I have watched this, but neither I nor anyone else within my knowledge has been able to expand at the same rate—the wildest expectations of one year seem absurdly tame the next.

Who may or shall adopt the rôle of prophet?

Why Not Mortgage Enough Timber in the Olympic Forest Reserve to Care for Present Needs?

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 29, 1913.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in discussing the subject, "Conservation at close range," in the House of Representatives last Saturday I made the statement that I wished to be absolutely fair in my presentation; that I particularly desired that my statements with regard to the Olympic National Forest and its management be literally correct. I also was anxious that strictures against the Fifth National Conservation Congress be based on fact.

I have been honored in the receipt of a letter from the Hon. Henry S. Graves, Chief Forester, in which he expresses appreciation of some of my statements and criticizes others. But concerning the main theme of my speech—that is, the general effect of the national-forest policy on local prosperity and development—he "sympathizes with a great deal of what you have brought out."

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I request permission to place his letter in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, November 25, 1913.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: In complying with your request that I point out anything in your speech in the House of Representatives last Saturday that I find not to be in accord with the facts I do not wish to go into minute criticism. I wish rather to deal with the broad aspects of the questions raised, recognizing your apparent desire to deal with the present national-forest administration in a spirit of fairness. There are minor inaccuracies, and there are other statements also relating to what I regard as nonessentials which I doubt but could not answer without inquiry to run down the facts on the ground. Many rumors are current with regard to foolish or absurd or harsh actions by forest officers. Some of these have come up from time to time in Congress. Generally they prove on inquiry to be either greatly distorted or made out of whole cloth. I do not mean by this to imply bad faith on the part of these who accept the stories as they come to them, and I am anxious to sift all allegations of grievances which appear to have any justification. It is my earnest desire to get at the facts in every case where harshness or bad judgment on the part of forest officers is alleged, and I shall welcome inquiry from you on all specific cases which may come to your attention When our men have done wrong I wish not only to right the wrong but also to get at the cause of trouble and try to correct it, that the Forest Service may serve the interests of the public without the spirit of bureaucracy.

I am heartily glad to see that you recognize that our forest officers are in close touch with the people of the country in which they work and in sympathy with them. I am grateful for your frank testimony to this fact, when the contrary view has been so generally spread abroad in the past. That our forest force is made up of eastern theorists and college graduates who are entirely out of sympathy with the people and are rather glad of opportunities to disoblige than of opportunities to be helpful is a time-honored slander long since worn threadbare. I do not mean that our men are never wrong; but we are trying in every case to see that the fair and right thing is done and to infuse the force with the spirit of helpfulness and service. When individuals are found temperamentally unfitted to work in this spirit they are displaced. Because our men are not bureaucratic, but work in the spirit which you yourself have pointed out, the sentiment in the communities which have first-hand dealings with the Forest Service is generally with us. I am entirely content that the national-forest administration should be known by its fruits.

I am sorry that in your remarks you have given color to the widely circulated report that the Forest Service brought large numbers of its employees to Washington for the National Conservation Congress and that through the participation of service men the voice of the West was stifled. No member of the service was brought to Washington for the congress. You cite Oregon as "represented by means of [its] Forest Service delegates." Every member of that delegation is a citizen of Oregon, and I believe all represented Oregon organizations. To bring in the name of the Forest Service as though it had in some unfair way exerted an influence upon the congress is an unwarranted and unjustifiable reflection on the organization for which I am responsible, and therefore on me personally.

Mr. Speaker, I break my Graves letter in order to say that in my speech I said that of Oregon's seven delegates I thought that four were either Forest Service men or paid employees of the conservation association. I do not and will not quarrel with Mr. Graves; therefore, in the permanent RECORD, under permission granted to me, I have changed my statement so that instead of reading "four Oregon delegates were," etc., it now reads, "several of the Oregon delegates were members of the Forest Service or paid employees of the conservation association." Some Forest Service men admittedly were there, but the main point is that the District of Columbia had 162 accredited delegates in that congress; Oregon had 7.

Mr. Graves's letter continues:

HARDSHIPS ON LOCAL POPULATION.

The main theme of your speech, however, concerned not these matters, but the general effect on local prosperity and development of the national-forest policy. I want to say that I sympathize with a great deal of what you brought out. It is true, that in the heavily timbered forests, especially of western Oregon and Washington, a real hardship is often imposed on the present local population by reason of the fact that the forests are not open to private acquisition.

By virtue of the fact that they were the first on the ground, these people would normally be the ones to reap the first benefit and obtain the first prizes, were the land open under the general land laws. As you say, there is nothing inherently wrong in a man's wanting to get the best that he can for himself and his family, or in the desire to obtain a speculative profit when others are doing the same and the law permits them to do so.

I am not speaking now, of course, of attempts to beat the laws and to get possession of valuable property through bad faith. We have unfortunately to deal with cases of the latter kind, although I am glad to say that most of them are old cases dating back to the time when the public conscience was less alive to the inherent wrong involved than it is now happily getting to be. I do not for a moment believe that you yourself would advocate allowing people to obtain homestead patents or patents under mining claims to heavily timbered national-forest lands where the law is made a subterfuge under which land is sought solely for the value of the timber on it. While the laws should be administered in a liberal spirit, in the sense of sympathetic recognition of the needs and honest efforts of people to establish homes and put to good use the public-land resources, to permit abuses of the law which facilitate the consolidation into great holdings and the indefinite postponement of development is not liberality but laxness. It is also bad for the public welfare.

I know of many places in which actual development of the country is now blanketed because lands suitable for agriculture were taken up under the homestead law by people with no intention of themselves putting the land to use and where the true settler is now kept out because the price of the land is put so high by those who are holding it that there is no chance for the man without capital to make a start; and if he does make a start, it must be under a handicap imposed by the necessity of paying heavily for the privilege which it was the intention of the Government to give him for nothing if he would take the land and put it under cultivation. The real vital question is this: Are we to go ahead as a Nation making a few people rich and making the ordinary citizen pay tribute at every turn to those who are astute or powerful enough to get into their hands the sources of wealth, or shall we continue the American tradition of equal opportunity for all and of making this a good country for the average man to live in?

In the end the national forests will more than justify themselves by the benefits which they will diffuse among the people settled in and around them.

To a very large extent they have already justified themselves. Wherever their resources are in present demand they are actively working for local prosperity, are satisfying all reasonable demands, and are strongly supported by local sentiment.

Where their resources are not in present demand there is an entirely explicable chafing against the system which throws a heavy burden on local communities. There is little comfort to the man who, with a handful of neighbors, must pay heavy taxes for roads, schools, and other purposes in the thought that at some time in the more or less indefinite future conservation will mean increased local prosperity. He bears his burdens now. Though the forests had been bought up and were being held undeveloped by speculators in order to take toll of the public later, he would at least, if they were in private hands, be able to make them pay their share toward the expenses of local self-government.

We are doing what we can to make the forests help these people, and we are more and more studying out ways to promote local welfare and development. Our present timber-sale policy, which seeks small purchasers for the supply of local needs as well as large purchasers to develop inaccessible regions, is an example.

The 25 per cent of receipts which is paid over to the States, and which already yields very substantial revenues for many localities, is another means to the same end. Already in some places this 25 per cent exceeds the revenue which would be obtained through taxation if the land were all in private hands, and as time goes on this will become more and more generally true. I do not believe that in the long run the best way to help the communities which now receive little from this 25 per cent fund is to increase the percentage, for where little use of the forests has as yet been developed the receipts would not do much good even though they were all made available.

BELIEVES GOVERNMENT SHOULD HELP IN CERTAIN CASES.

I do believe that the Government might well recognize an obligation to local communities which now receive little from this fund along a different line. I see no reason why the National Government should not, out of its general resources, provide for the development of roads in such regions in some proportion to the value of the Government property as against the value of private property in the locality. While the improvements and means of development thus provided would be in the nature of borrowing on the value of public property which is not now bringing in any returns, the expenditures would not merely help the people now resident in or near the forests, but would also tend to develop the value of the property owned by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, again I interrupt Mr. Graves's letter to call the attention of every Member of the House of Representatives to what he has written just above. That is the whole point. It is the basis of all my arguments. The bringing of certain great counties in my district to the very verge of bankruptcy is why I complain, and the people of southwest Washington are behind that complaint. Mr. Graves is right. Why should my county this year spend $100.000 of its own money for 10 miles of road in the forest reserve, where the United States Government is holding for the future of all of its people millions of dollars' worth of resources? Note well what the Chief Forester has written. It is not desired to sell this timber now. Why should not Congress advance money on it exactly as would be done if it were privately owned?

Mr. Graves concludes as follows:

I hope that we may be able to work together to make the national forests serve what I conceive to be their true purpose—not the building up of a system of Government landlordism with a view to raising as large revenues as possible from the people whose labor and whose homes are making the West and strengthening the country, but the increase of prosperity and the maintenance and development of the power of the forest resources to serve human needs and to keep this country a good place for the average citizen.

Very sincerely, yours, H. S. GRAVES, Forester.

Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the people of western Washington I thank Mr. Graves for his splendid letter. I have placed it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and added it to the pamphlet I am mailing in order to give it the greatest possible publicity.

HOW WALCOTT'S STATEMENT HAS KEPT ALIVE.

One thing more: In my remarks last week I endeavored to point out some of the fallacies and misstatements in the conservation dream books found in such profusion over in the Congressional Library. Among other things, I said that Hon. George Otis Smith, present Director of the Geological Survey, had predicted in 1889 that all of the coal in the United States would be gone in 50 years. Mr. Smith very kindly calls my attention that about 1899 Mr. Walcott, then Director of the Geological Survey, made the statement in the course of an address that the anthracite coal of this country would be exhausted in 150 years. In a letter to me Director Smith says:

A typographical error made one of the newspapers quote him as giving the life of the anthracite coal as 50 years. This error was promptly copied by other newspapers, which in turn added to the misstatement by leaving off the anthracite and making his statement apply to all coal, bituminous as well as anthracite; and I understand from Mr. E. W. Parker, coal statistician of the survey, that this statement was widely quoted at the time.

How easy it was for some alarmist to grasp that statement as it continued to go its round, credit it to the present director, and place it in a book on the resources of the United States, where I found it during my study this summer of the conservation dream books.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, how many careless statements are made, here, there, and everywhere, to be caught up by the press and scattered broadcast. Then, when we want facts in connection with the discussion of a great national question, such as I have been discussing, what an effort it is to pick out the truth from the loose, false, and careless statements put forth in such volume.

Material for Construction of Ships of War.

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. BROWNING,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 22, 1913.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article from the Army and Navy Register, dealing with economy in the administration of Army and Navy affairs, a subject of deep interest to the multitude of men who earn their living in the navy yards and in the shipbuilding plants of the country. The article is instructive as well as illuminating.

The article referred to is as follows:

A FOREIGN INVASION.

"Sooner or later the American producer of material which enters into the construction of ships of war will come to a realization that the existing law permits the purchase abroad of that material. Contracts which have recently been awarded by the Navy Department show that every disposition exists to lower the cost of Navy work by placing orders with European manufacturers. There might be justification for this if it were shown that the Government were in the hands of a monopoly that was looting the Public Treasury, but there is no justification for the adoption on these grounds of a general policy which shall favor the European contractor to the detriment of the American manufacturer. The Navy should not be built up or maintained by the encouragement of the foreign producer. It is no great shock to the body politic to be required to pay the American prices for American material. There is frequently a difference of quality, a certainty of promptness in delivery, and the opportunity for duplication of material in time of emergency which account for the greater cost.

"In other years the naval appropriation law has contained a clause requiring the Navy Department to purchase its war material, especially that entering into the construction of ships, of domestic manufacturers. This requirement was modified subsequently so as to permit the Secretary of the Navy to purchase the material abroad if it should appear that the American bidders were excessive in their prices. The last Congress omitted any such qualification, while the new tariff act includes a provision that allows the shipbuilders of this country, including, of course, the Navy Department, to buy material of foreign manufacture, to be entered in bond with the understanding that it shall have free entry on proof that the material has actually gone into the composition of a ship, either Government or mercantile. It is perhaps natural that the Secretary of the Navy should take advantage of this circumstance to obtain material from Europe at a lower figure than it is possible to obtain it in the United States, but it is also easy to imagine that this commercial instinct may be carried to the extremity which will find the Navy Department some day without domestic sources of supply. It is wise to have at the command of the Navy Department, as of the War Department, reliable plants under private control from which war material may be derived in time of emergency. It will be of temporary benefit only to drive out of business the American manufacturer in any line in order to make a showing of "saving" in the expenditure of public funds in certain directions.

"There is no doubt that all of our ships and guns could be imported at a lower price than they can be built in this country; and for that matter, to illustrate the point humorously, we could readily secure from abroad droves of alien sailors—coolies, if necessary—and by naturalizing them man our ships with low-priced foreigners brought here from distant ports where they receive but a pittance in wages. In this manner our Navy Department could make a huge saving in our naval expenditures, but this is not the sort of Navy the American people want. Aside from the splendid traditions of the service, we believe that we can build our ships, guns, and equipment better than they can be built in any foreign country. In matters of ship design we are admittedly superior. It is nowhere contended that there exists a trust or monopoly which controls the shipbuilding industry in this country.

"In the end it must be realized there is a settled conviction, to which Americans will subscribe unfailingly and with enthusiasm, that their Navy shall be American through and through; that the ships shall be the product of our navy yards, or of the yards of our domestic shipbuilders; that our armor and equipment shall represent the output of the foundries and factories of this country; and, finally, that these fighting machines, the visible evidence of superior workmanship of our own artisans and the ingenuity of our own designers, shall have for its personnel the American officer and the American bluejacket."

OF

HON. P. E. QUIN,

OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, November 26, 1913.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address delivered by the Hon. WM. H. MURRAY, of Oklahoma, at Columbus, Ohio, November 13, 1913, on the subject of the "Trinity of Evils."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the document named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address of Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma is as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE HON. WM. H. MURRAY, M. C., OF OKLAHOMA, BEFORE THE FIFTEENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE ANTISALOON LEAGUE, AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, NOVEMBER 13, 1913.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen: Since you and I are strangers to each other, let us have an understanding before I begin. If you knew me you would understand that I never take a public position merely to please the multitude, and I shall not do so now. I am not afraid to differ with my fellow man, but I am afraid to be wrong, and the great solicitude of us all should be that we are right down to the last detail. With this understanding I begin.

I understand the prime object of your convention to be the eradication of the liquor traffic in every State and the ultimate adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, importation, and transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States.

In the growing demand for this extension of prohibition laws you are met with the objection that to enforce this policy means the destruction of the functions of State government, and you desire to know of me, among other things, my opinion of this objection. To this question my answer is that I am a strong believer in an indissoluble union of indestructible States and that a just balance of power between local self-government of the States and the Nation will ever remain the mainstay of our liberties and the perpetuity of the Republic; but this boundary line is not marked between wholesome provisions and national evils. In the abstract, the word "universal" is our cue. The key to the preservation of the sovereignty of States in the exercise of those things necessary to give to the States their proper autonomy exists in the grant of suffrage, the extension of its qualifications, and the control of elections, together with the State's control of all things which can not be administered universally or are not national evils. To express this concretely, the adoption of the thirteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, destroying the evil of slavery, was a wise provision and not out of line with the proper proportion of power between the States and the Federal Government, for the reason that it was a universal evil which could have no exceptional benefit by its retention in any State.

The mistake made was in the attempt by later amendments to control suffrage in the Southern States by the Federal Government, because suffrage can not be "universal" in its application and must be determined by the condition of the people. Herein marks the boundary line between State and National authority. The abolition of slavery, a universal evil, was then like the universal evil of the liquor traffic of to-day, and the adoption of the prohibition amendment is merely an extension of the policy which marked the adoption of the thirteenth amendment before referred to. Hence, as one Member of Congress, I would favor the submission to the States of such an amendment, but I warn you that in our doing so consummate care and discretion must be exercised not to violate practical experience. Such an amendment, in the first place, must be submitted in a constitutional manner, so that the validity of its adoption can not afterwards be questioned; and, secondly, we should plant ourselves on the proposition that alcohol, though one of God's greatest medicines, was not intended to be used as a beverage, and in drafting such an amendment these fundamental principles should be recognized. I may not be expressing on this point the views of you gentlemen. In this position I have but my own conscience to consider. Sufficient to say, I am expressing those indicated by my own conscience, drawn from my own study, information, and experience, having lived for many years in the old Indian Territory, now a portion of Oklahoma, and which Territory is the only domain under the flag where a legal saloon never existed. To deny liquor's proper place as a medicine is but to deny science, the Creative Divinity, and the experience of mankind.

Instead of such proposed amendment being violative of the best policy of the autonomy of the States, I repeat on the contrary that our experience teaches that many phases of interstate commerce and of the control of traffic and transportation should be given to the Federal Government, that we may efface the "twilight zone" between State and Federal jurisdictions, which too often permits monopolies to go unwhipped and menacing Nation-wide evils to live under the sanction of law, and that, too, contrary to our wishes.

I say this as a believer in the doctrine of State rights as modified by the issues growing out of the destruction of slavery, rehabilitating and establishing the new Nation—the Republic of to-day.

The wisdom of State power to control, define, and regulate suffrage as the boundary line between Federal and State authority is better shown now than at the time of the writing of the Constitution, because different conditions in different States determine for the most part whom it is best to intrust with the ballot. Upon virtue and intelligence republics must ever depend; hence to intrust the ballot in the hands of an ignorant or vicious man is more dangerous than to intrust firearms to a child; is more dangerous than giving a bomb to an anarchist; because the one might blow out the brains of an individual or family, while the other may blow up the republic and civilization itself. We have reached that period in our development when it becomes necessary in the interest of society and wholesome government to limit rather than to extend suffrage. The wisdom of this is shown in the Southern States. Prohibition itself gained a foothold there and was made possible only after the restriction upon the suffrage of the negro. It necessarily follows that in some States it is the part of wisdom to base suffrage upon sex, with limitations; in others, perhaps, to extend suffrage to all, irrespective of sex, but with a limitation upon the vicious of both sexes.

The exercise of the ballot can never universally be applied, because universal qualification can never be attained in the most enlightened State; hence it must ever remain a State problem; and herein lies the distinctive hub around which all State authority must revolve. But in dealing with great national or universal evils our safety lies in national control, regulation, or national power to destroy. On these the best wishes of the Republic will be subserved by embracing the well-known principles of the law of the old Roman Republic: Salus rei publicæ suprema lex esto—rendered in English: "Let the public good be the supreme law."

But to return to your primary object, the suppression of the liquor traffic, I take it, however, that you do not intend to neglect the moral side while drafting the legal means for its suppression, nor that you intend or will overlook the attending evils connected with that traffic; hence my address on the "Trinity of evils" will embrace both the legal and moral side of this three-sided mongrel of Mammon. There are three fundamental evils ever present and characteristic of a dense and congested population, which I choose to term the "trinity of evils," because they are so interwoven and interlocking, so strongly inseparable with a congested population, as to become the root of all evil in our American life and advanced civilization. They are as surely the trinity of corruption and debauchery, of immorality and sin, as the "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost" constitute the Trinity of righteousness and the Christian religion. Almost invariably where you find one of these evils you will find one or both of the others. I refer to the evils of intemperance, gambling, and sexual debauchery, and I am not sure but what these evils are in the reverse ratio of my naming them.

The drink habit is in the forefront because of its own inherent evil and because it is the cloak to cover and to incubate the other two, just as it covered the debauchery of Alexander the Great, whose real downfall was that of a libertine. While a man may go to the ditch and to the gutter by drink he may regain his will power and self-control, recover his health, and his manhood, and become again a good citizen, while should he go to the ditch by sexual excesses or debauchery he is mentally, morally, physically, and spiritually dead.

Gambling is a great evil, because it leads to the other two. Games of chance and gambling seem to run in American blood. Our greatest business institution—the stock exchange—is the very mother of the vinegar of gambling, and yet it is a business concern that touches the pulse of all the civilized and uncivilized earth. Not a drought or flood, a bountiful rain or sunshine, a pestilence or production, a treaty of peace or arbitration, or war or bloodshed, but is quickly told by the pulse—"the ticker"—of the stock exchange; but being a private club, not subject to public control or legal regulation, it is often diverted from its legitimate functions—a common market place for the sale of bonds, securities, and products—to one of gambling. This as the chief of all gambling concerns can be wiped out by law, while the evil of gambling in the American blood can not be eradicated by law, neither can it create sobriety, nor morality, nor that will power and self-control that will enable the citizen to throw the brakes upon his passions and appetites.

And this brings our attention to the moral precepts of the family, of the home, and of the church that must be continued even after we have secured the proper laws, and both must go hand in hand for the destruction of the votaries as well as the temple of these evils. We can not legislate temperance into a people, but law can destroy the rum shop and the temple of its colaborers—the gambler and the libertine—but it can not destroy its worshipers. Law can tear down the temple, but its votaries must be reformed through the influence of the home and the church. We are too often prone to feel ourselves in fancied security upon the success at the polls of the prohibition statutes and laws against gambling and the brothel. We fail to uphold the officers' hands, to give them proper encouragement, without which it is impossible for them to perform their duties. It is through such persistent and constant aid of the people who compose the juries of a community and legislature of State or Nation. The officer is not to blame when public sentiment aids this trio of evils and you shirk your responsibility as juror, voter, or citizen; nor can the law be made self-executing by the election of men to public office who have neither integrity, honor, veracity, nor morals. We ought never to elect to public office a man whom we would be ashamed to invite into our own homes.

In this connection permit me to quote from James Bryce's work, the American Commonwealth, in which he says:

> A prominent New Yorker once said to me, speaking of one of the chief justices of the city, "I do not think him such a bad fellow; he has always been friendly to me, and would give me a midnight injunction or do anything else for me at a moment's notice, but, of course, he is the last person I would dream of asking to my house."

This was but an indirect means of telling Mr. Bryce that this judge was a moral reprobate. And when Mr. Bryce put it into that splendid work, which, to my notion, is the soundest, clearest criticism of American institutions yet written in the English language, what a scathing rebuke to New York's judiciary was thus placed in print!

Permit me, ladies and gentlemen, to bring home to you this question: Do you repeat in your home States the example of New York in the election of your public officials?

A drunkard is fit neither for business nor public office—he is not a successful saloon keeper.

A gambler makes of a professional man a vagabond, of a merchant a bankrupt, and a defaulter of a public officer.

A libertine, having no morals, is soon destitute of honor, veracity, or integrity. Then, why should we elect either?

The expression is often made that "corruption destroys government," but corruption is not the first cause. What produced the corruption? The answer is: The inactivity of the righteous citizen. Just as the body of the individual is normal, his pulse beats regularly, the blood circulates freely, and all of the other elements of the living organism operate in strict accord with nature's laws, give health, happiness, and long life to the individual; but when the pulse beats irregularly, the blood and other organs cease to do their normal part, poison and disease of the system set up, and sickness and death inevitably follow. So also does government become corrupt and society sick, and national death follows when the best element of society fails to perform its duty. When the home ceases to teach the child, the school overlooks his moral precepts, and the church and the pulpit fail to thunder against evil tendencies, and the righteous citizen fails to deposit an honest ballot, consistent with his conscience and principles, in making up the courts, the legislative and executive branches of the Government, or to perform the duties of juror, then it is that "corruption in government" sets in and national death follows.

Yes, my friends, we must elect to public office, more particularly to the highest positions, to the bench, to Congress, and to the United States Senate, only such men who will understand that finer sense of responsibility which their position carries, and with that will power and self-control necessary to restrain passion and to preserve commendable conduct while exercising the functions of public office, for their official aid and assistance in the exercise of the power of such public office; nor must we forget to train the future manhood and womanhood in the home and in the public school to know themselves, to understand their own passions and appetities, and to create within them that will power that will enable them surely, certainly, to conserve their own passions by throwing on the brakes, especially upon that divine passion, out of which grow mentality and the strength of manhood, the sex passion, which Buddha so aptly describes:

> A sex passion, shot into the human soul like an arrow, sharper than hooks with which to tame elephants and hotter than flames—

a divine instinct which, when conserved, gives to its possessor mentality, courage, force, and will power, but which, when left unrestrained or to drift without proper moral direction, wrecks its possessor of all physical, moral, mental, and spiritual manhood. I mean to impress upon you the importance of this training, along with the demand for legislation, because such training insures our own boys and girls, not alone against degradation, imbecility, and idiocy, but gives to our future courts, juries, and legislatures character to enforce and uphold the law and all the powers that make for a nobler citizenship.

Mr. James Bryce, though a foreigner himself, gives us warning of our social evils by the question:

> Will existing evils in America prove so obstinate and European immigration continue to depress the average of intelligence and patriotism among the voters?

Here he touches the keynote of what portends the greatest evil that underlies our social fabric. Legislation, true enough, does not produce social conditions, but does produce tendencies creating them. The foreigner in general among us does not constitute the evil. It is that class coming by the "contract system," which, having in view nothing but cheap labor and, in order to secure this cheap labor, makes contracts through agencies scattered all over Continental Europe, has brought to our shores and planted in American life the ignorance and loathsome diseases, the depressed and hopeless, the degenerate morals, and the superstitions of the worst elements upon that Continent, until the white-slave traffic, which has characterized Continental Europe since the fall of the Roman Empire, has been planted in America. America was founded upon Anglo-Saxon, German, and Scottish regard for integrity, morality, and honesty and purity, and, above all, regard for the virtue and purity of womanhood; but this regard is becoming weaker in most of the States of the Union, not confining itself alone to the overcrowded cities, but extending its branches and corrupting agencies of influences even to the rural communities, where lies the greatest hope of American purity of manhood and womanhood. The virtue of the wife and mother, her pure character and blameless life, is the saving power of the human race. Regard for and faith in her virtue is the mainstay of its continuance. Shall we shut our eyes to these awful conditions and grant that libertinism is the rule and not the exception? Once this becomes true; once this faith and this confidence is destroyed; once when we point to the womanhood and can not say, "There, as a rule, is virtue, spotless morality, and purity," your civilization is over and with it your free institutions.

A nation, like families and races, is weak or strong in proportion to the morality and virtue of its women, and its women are chaste in proportion to the regard in which men hold them.

No man under an extensive, penetrating research of science and of the philosophy of history can escape the conclusion that laws of the State (government) and rules of society affect the home, home life, and happiness.

I am practical enough to know that virtue can not be legislated into the character of womanhood; but investigation will show that the lewd are the exception, and there are three conditions which the law itself can remedy: The enticing of the innocent, unsuspecting maiden from the country precinct on the promise of being a "friend"; carrying her away to some great city to be surrounded for a few days with the luxuries of life, eventually to be taken by stealth to a brothel and there forced to remain and become deflowered, can be prevented by law. Conditions of poverty and hardships also add another, larger per cent to the same class. The law could assist in alleviating these conditions of poverty. And another class, where the professed lover steals the heart and confidence of some pure, innocent girl, in whose heart has been planted a sex passion of which he takes advantage, turning from the character of lover to that of the libertine and seducer—the law here could affect this social condition. For the white-slave trafficker and the libertine or seducer the doors of the penitentiary ought always to be open. The woman who falls by reason of hardships and poverty, the helping hand of the State should assist and alleviate that condition. The truly lewd in mind and body we can only take care of as experience best demonstrates, for neither law, training, nor social condition will benefit that class. But let us save that greater per cent—the unwilling deflowered.

I care not how far from the paths of virtue she has strayed.
I care not what inroads dishonor hath made.
I care not what elements hath cankered the pearl.
Though stained and sullied she's somebody's girl.

The deflowering of young womanhood ought to bring to the doors of us all the realization of the precarious and hazardous protection of our own daughters.

The denizens of the brothel may shock us, but may we possess a Scotchman's will to marshal our battalions against this "Trinity of evils," and in our hearts for wife and mother, for home and family, may muffled drums eternally beat their everlasting reveille.

The integrity of the home and the happiness of the family, the pure character of the wife and mother, constitute the sum of society, civilization, and wholesome government.

Overflowed Lands in Bonner County, Idaho.

OF

HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 29, 1913.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent granted, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed a report made in 1910 by C. G. Elliott, Chief of Drainage Investigations, Department of Agriculture, with reference to the drainage of an area of land in northern Idaho, consisting of about 40,000 acres. Much of this land is in private ownership and the people living in that section have been endeavoring to perfect plans to reclaim the land by making assessments at pro rata amounts per acre, but they need reliable information regarding the engineering feasibility of the project.

The report of Engineer Elliott contains information of the greatest possible value to the people in that section, and it should be available to them, having been gathered at considerable expense. It will also be valuable to the Members of this and the other branch of Congress in considering such legislation as may be necessary to provide for the drainage of this large and valuable section of the country.

The report is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Report on the Kootenai River Valley in Bonner County, Idaho, by C. G. Elliott, Chief of Drainage Investigations.

The Kootenai River Valley between Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and the international boundary line has for years attracted attention because of its agricultural possibilities. The valley contains about 40,000 acres of level alluvial land free from stones and timber, lying in the heart of a mountainous region containing numerous mining camps which constantly demand large supplies of food. Some correspondence passed between the department and Mr. Charles G. Reeder, of Spokane, Wash., regarding the possibility of converting this large area into productive farms. In the course of my western trip last summer I found it convenient, in response to Mr. Reeder's request, to make a personal examination of the valley not only in Idaho but also in British Columbia as far as the town of Nelson, and now take occasion to discuss the reclamation problem in the light of such information as I have been able to collect.

Before making this personal inspection I was permitted to examine the very excellent report of Mr. Otto V. Welle, civil engineer, made upon the reclamation of the valley in 1905, in which he outlines a plan for reclaiming the lands. I also obtained a blue-print land map, upon which is shown the meandered course of the Kootenai River in northern Idaho and in British Columbia. In this discussion I have used the data which Mr. Welle has gathered from various sources and shall take occasion to comment upon the plan which he proposes for reclaiming the lands of the valley.

On August 5, 1910, Mr. Reeder, of Spokane; Mr. A. J. Kent, of Bonners Ferry, and myself started down the river from Bonners Ferry in a gasoline launch and proceeded by boat as far as the station of Copeland, and thence by railroad along the edge of the valley to Port Hill, which is situated at the international boundary line. Several short excursions were made afoot across portions of the lands immediately adjoining the river, though it should be understood that these examinations were general rather than specific in character.

The Kootenai River is a stream flowing northerly between two high and abrupt ranges of mountains and is bordered by a valley of nearly level land from 1 mile to 4 miles wide. The stream itself is found to be 50 feet deep in many places, is about 650 feet wide, and is supplied by mountain lakes and streams. The banks are about 20 feet above the low-water stage of the river. A strip of woodland frequently fringes the bank, although in general the entire valley is fairly clear of timber and brush of any kind. The land slopes away from the stream toward the foot of the bluffs, where the surface is usually 4 or 5 feet lower than at the river banks. Several streams of various sizes coming out of the mountains enter the valley, which in many cases have but a small channel in which to carry the water from the hills to the river. The lands along the foot of the bluffs are always wet, due to the seep water which comes from the hills and also to the small streams which flow from the mountain slopes and deposit their waters upon the level lands below.

An examination of the lands in general shows that the surface has been eroded by overflows, which have doubtless occurred throughout the entire formation of the valley. Small coulees, 25 to 50 feet wide and 6 or 7 feet deep, are sometimes found scattered throughout the valley, having no connection with the river. There are also ponds or flats which lie 2 or 3 feet below the level of the surrounding land. At the time of my visit, which was a low-water season, these depressions and coulees contained water, the larger ponds being in such a swampy condition that they could not be crossed. The land is remarkable in that it contains no stone, gravel, or pebbles of any kind, although lying between mountains of granite and limestones.

The natural vegetation may be regarded as a helpful guide in determining the fertility of the land. I find the higher and drier portions of the valley are covered with a fair quality of wild grass, much as is found upon the wet prairies of the Mississippi Valley. This is valuable for pasture and is utilized for hay when the seasons are favorable for harvesting and curing the crop. The wetter lands are covered by a vigorous growth of the marsh scouring rush, a plant belonging to the Equisetaceæ or horsetail family. The lands which are constantly covered with water produce the Sagittaria, or arrowhead, a plant belonging to the water-plantain family. The swamps also produce the well-known club rush, belonging to the bulrush family. These plants are found on all of the wet lands of the Mississippi Valley and are there regarded as indicating a fertile soil. Soils which contain them have been drained and proven to be excellent lands for the production of staple crops, such as grass, grains, and corn.

Mr. E. B. Ross, of Spokane, has furnished me a copy of a report upon the analysis of this soil made at the State agricultural experiment station, Pullman, Wash. The analysis shows the following plant-food elements: Potash, 0.32 per cent; phosphorus, 0.19 per cent; total nitrogen, 0.04 per cent; lime, 9.12 per cent. The total humus of the soil is given at 0.3 per cent. In commenting upon this analysis, Mr. Thatcher, director of the station, says that the soil is somewhat deficient in humus and in nitrogen. By comparing the analysis with that of other soils this is found to be true. A good soil, according to the chemist, should contain about 0.15 per cent of nitrogen. This deficiency, however, is characteristic of many alluvial lands. The soils in the Mississippi Valley which produce large crops of cotton show the same characteristic, yet many of them have produced abundant crops for many years without the addition of artificial fertilizers. The quantity of lime, which is abundant, is always regarded as a valuable constituent of soils. I may say in this connection that chemical analyses of soils are not given very much weight by practical agriculturists except in connection with experimental cultivation. However, taking the chemical analysis in connection with the growth of natural vegetation and the crops which have been grown at various points in the valley, I should say that there is no question regarding the value of the land for the production of such field crops as are suited to the climate. In fact, this has been demonstrated at various locations along the river where the lands are sufficiently dry for farming purposes. The surface soil has a light-gray color, except in the more swampy portions, where the humus derived from decaying vegetation has given a dark color to the soil. It would appear that the lands are especially adapted to grasses and forage plants, but their present wet condition limits the varieties of vegetation to those which can withstand an excess of water. The fact that redtop grass grows abundantly where the conditions of the land are favorable shows that the more valuable grasses, such as timothy and clovers, can be produced if proper drainage is secured.

I am told that with the exception of 1894 the valley is subject to overflows from the river at only certain points where the banks are low or where creeks or small rivers enter the stream. It is said that usually the banks of the river are high enough to prevent a direct overflow, but where streams enter the channel the water from the river flows out during the flood season, backing up the small streams and passing out into the lowland which lies at the foot of the hills. The water having filled all of the low portions of the valley in this way causes the land to remain permanently wet during the entire season, because the slight fall of the surface does not permit the water to pass away when the river recedes. The overflows are not dependent in any way upon the rainfall of the valley, since the stream is fed from the mountains, where there is an abundant quantity of snow, the depth often reaching 6 or 7 feet. When the snow melts in the ordinary way or is hastened by Chinook winds, which not infrequently strike the mountains, great quantities of water are brought to the river by the mountain streams. The volume can not be accurately predicted, because of the erratic conditions which cause the melting of the snow. The probable amount can only be estimated by the floods which have already occurred. In addition to the waters produced by the overflow of the banks of the stream at low points there are always large volumes of water which come from the slopes of the mountains direct and are deposited at the foot of the hills upon the level lands. It is quite clear that although these lands are fertile they can not be profitably cultivated without protection from the excessive quantities of water which come upon them every year from the two sources named. The custom of the owners at present is to secure what value they can from the land by grazing after the floods disappear and later mow and cure such grass as may be found suitable for hay. There being a dearth of agricultural land in that portion of the State, the prices for produce are always high, and for that reason the reclamation of the valley for productive purposes is an attractive proposition and merits most careful consideration.

The climate and rainfall should be considered, since these are important features of an agricultural region. The rainfall records have been kept at Bonners Ferry since May, 1907. We have records of only one entire year, that of 1908. The total rainfall for that year was 19.6 inches, as appears from the following record of the Weather Bureau at that point:

The greatest monthly precipitation occurs in February and in December. The rainfall, however, during the summer months as indicated by the records of the two years is not at all uniform, as, for instance, in August, 1908, it was 0.47 inch, while for the same month in 1907 it was 2.65 inches. September, 1908, had only 0.28 inch, while the same month in 1907 had 2.31 inches. The maximum rainfall, however, for any month is not excessive. In fact, no floods appear to be occasioned by direct rainfall, and the distribution is particularly favorable for the growth of crops, being neither too great nor too small. The soil being of a clay nature will retain moisture during the seasons when there is a deficiency in precipitation. Besides this, the evaporation in the valley is not great. The temperature is also important, and it is to be regretted that reliable records do not cover a longer period. The following is the record of temperature for 1907 and 1908 at Bonners Ferry:

These records show that the seasons are cool and short, but are sufficiently long for the growth of grasses, small grains, and root crops.

We come now to the examination of the physical conditions of the land and the characteristics of the river, which should be considered in the problem of draining the valley. I take from Mr. Weile's report the following data, which have a direct bearing upon the problem under consideration.

	Acres.
Area of land between Bonners Ferry and international boundary (in Idaho)	40,000
Area from international boundary to Kootenai Lake (in British Columbia)	40,000
	80,000

Kootenai Landing, south end of lake, to the outlet of lake	35
From outlet to Narrows	2½
From the Narrows to Nelson, British Columbia	18
Distance from Bonners Ferry to Nelson	125½

The fall in this entire distance as ascertained by Mr. Weile, which, of course, is only approximate, is as follows:

	Distance.
	Miles.	Feet.
Bonners Ferry to Port Hill	45	8
Port Hill to Kootenai Lake	25	4
Across Kootenai Lake	35	0
Through the "Narrows"	2½	1
From the "Narrows" to Nelson, British Columbia	18	0
Total	125½	13

The lake into which the river discharges is about 65 miles long. The outlet of the lake is about midway, and the "Narrows" through which the water is discharged is, according to Mr. Weile's measurement, 334 feet wide at low-water stage. From this point on to the city of Nelson the water is called the "West Arm" of the lake and is level. Two miles below Nelson the rapids begin and the stream is again known as the "Kootenai River." The entire lake and river are bordered by abrupt mountains, all the streams from which are precipitous. The rise of the lake above low water in 1894, the highest stage known, was 32 feet. With that exception the highest floods have been 24 feet, the usual flood height being about 19 feet.

It will be seen that the entire valley from Bonners Ferry to the town of Nelson, British Columbia, is an elongated lake, the narrowest part of which is the "Narrows," which connects the main lake with the West Arm. The fall for the entire distance to the rapids is but a little over 1 inch per mile, while the fall of the valley in Idaho is about 2 inches per mile.

Mr. Weile proposes a plan to prevent the flood plans of the lake from rising more than 10 feet above low water on the assumption that such control will reclaim the Idaho lands from injurious inundation. At the time of my inspection of the lake it was stated by the steamboat captain that the lake stood about 8 feet above low-water stage. All of the lowlands of the Idaho part of the valley were then swampy, though it is probable that the river was low enough to permit their drainage, if suitable ditches had been provided. Mr. Weile's plan is to enlarge the channel at the "Narrows" and at various points along the West Arm of the lake, including the channel at the first rapids, so as to increase its capacity sufficiently to prevent the water from rising in the lake above the 10-foot stage. I have examined the portions of the channel where it is proposed to do the work and find the conditions as he described them. There is no doubt that the work he proposes can be done. The question first to be considered, however, is whether the work, if done, will bring the expected result. I think not, for the following reasons: The effect of the contraction of the lake at the "Narrows" is to cause a congestion of the water and raise its level back of the obstruction until it has sufficient head to overcome the resistance. This will give rise to a greater velocity in order to compensate for the narrowness of the channel and is the cause of the great velocity of flow through the "Narrows" when the water in the lake is high. Should this channel be widened so as to remove the congestion, the water would be at the same height on both sides of the "Narrows" and the velocity would be that due to slope only, which is exceedingly slight and would not produce the velocity which has been figured. He computes the volume which must pass through the "Narrows" as an amount coming from the lake only, whereas on account of its level surface the entire valley, in addition to the lake is the body of water that must be taken into consideration in computing the flow through the "Narrows." There is another feature which must be taken into account. The entire valley is so nearly level and is so long that such lowering of the lake as could be done would not materially diminish the cost of adequately draining the lands of the valley, particularly in Idaho. The water which does the injury, with the exception of that which comes out of the river in low places along the banks, is that which comes from the hill slopes and streams and lodges in the lowland, particularly at the edge of the hills. Lowering the lake will not materially change this condition.

In my experience I find it exceedingly difficult to get a large number of landowners to cooperate in carrying out a drainage project, especially where the country is new and the commercial value of drainage untried. The general proposition may be readily agreed to by landowners, but the later adjustment of assessments for the cost of the work brings to light unlooked-for objections and legal complications, especially in carrying out projects for the reclamation of overflowed lands. I do not wish it understood that such work can not be done, but to call attention to the fact that projects of moderate size are much more easily and expeditiously handled I can not see how you will derive any adequate benefit from doing work in British Columbia. The valley in Idaho lies higher than the one in British Columbia, so that the farmer will have a flood relief until the waters on the British Columbia side are concentrated and otherwise controlled.

I wish now to look at the matter from the viewpoint of the Idaho landowner. In my opinion these lands can be profitably improved at a moderate cost and without any great difficulty or delay in the following manner: I will assume that the river banks are not overflowed or that, if they are overflowed at points, strong levees can be put up to prevent it, except where tributary streams enter the river. Divide the area on each side of the river into sections of 2,000 to 5,000 acres, the size of these sections being determined by the proximity of the river to the bluff or by a tributary stream which brings water from the mountains. Cut off these tracts by cross levees extending from the bank of the river to the foot of the bluff. The lower end of each district should have a ditch or stream which will conduct the water from the hills and also from the lowlands of the district to the river. This ditch or stream should have a levee on the upper side. For draining the land construct a large ditch with a steam dredge at the foot of and parallel to the bluff, this being the lowest part of the land, using the excavated earth in making a strong levee on the river side of the ditch. This ditch should intercept all water from the hills and lead it to the lower end of the district outside of the levee to the river. A natural stream should be utilized for such a discharging point. Both ditch and levee can be constructed with a dredge at one operation. The ditch should be about 30 feet wide and 7 feet deep, and the levee probably about 8 feet high, with side slopes of 3 to 1. The base for the levee should be properly cleared and prepared for the deposit of the earth.

The land slopes from the river banks toward the bluffs. Ditches should be made where necessary for draining the land into the main ditch which skirts the bluff. These should have automatic sluice gates where they enter the main ditch, so that when the main is full water will not flow back into the land, but when the water is sufficiently low in the river they will discharge automatically.

I have represented this plan on a sketch taken from the map near the station of Copeland. The method proposed may be more briefly stated as follows:

1. Levee the low places in the river banks.
2. Cut off a tract of convenient size by running cross levees from the river to the bluffs.
3. Excavate a large ditch along the edge of the bluff with a strong levee on the river side and connect it with the river bank.
4. Make necessary ditches from the land into the main ditch, discharging them through automatic sluices.

I was under the impression that the land could not be well drained without using a pumping plant in addition to ditches and levees. Since I have examined the rainfall records I am of the opinion that by reason of the moderate precipitation and absence of heavy storms the land will take care of all rainfall if outside water is kept out. The river may, however, remain high a long time during some years and so seriously interfere with the discharge of the ditches that pumps may be required. With the above arrangement I think that the half of the inclosed district adjoining the river may be put in cultivated crops and the opposite half utilized for permanent meadow and pasture. I have referred to the use of the steam excavator for this work. Some form of the land dredge, with drag-line bucket, is admirably adapted to this work. I am inclosing a description and picture of a machine which I think is suited to construct both ditches and dikes at operation. Levees which are made with a machine are more solid and compact than those made in the old way, though not so shapely unless special care is taken in finishing. I think a machine could be obtained and work done on a district for about 12 cents per cubic yard for excavation, and the earth deposited in the form of a levee. I estimate the cost for a 3,000-acre district would be from $13 to $15 an acre.

Measurements and further examinations will be required to secure more accurate estimates, for the location and size of the district would vary the cost. Some districts could be worked out much more cheaply than others. I have indicated the manner in which I think the owners of land on the Idaho side should go at this problem. It is a good proposition. If the kind of farming should later require better drainage, a pumping plant could be installed at an additional expense of possibly about $2 or at the most of $3 an acre, without any material change in the system of ditches and levees above outlined.

Respectfully submitted.

C. G. ELLIOTT,
Chief of Drainage Investigations.

Conservation.

OF
HON. CLAUDE WEAVER,
OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, November 29, 1913.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House of Representatives to place in the permanent RECORD of this Congress an instructive speech on the subject of "Conservation," delivered by my colleague, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, of Oklahoma, on the 29th day of October, 1913, at Tulsa, Okla., before the International Dry-Farming Congress.

A speech on conservation was altogether fitting before that great international council which honored the State of Oklahoma by holding its deliberations in the beautiful, fast-growing, and magical city of Tulsa. The alpha and omega of dry farming is conservation. The basic principle is to prevent waste of water, and the whole science of dry farming is simply the conservation of water in the soil for use in agriculture.

The speech of Mr. FERRIS has a permanent value because it defines with precision the right principles of conservation and demonstrates the profound economic truth that conservation does not mean to lock up the illimitable natural resources of a nation and deny a rational and legitimate use of such resources to the people. There is a school of so-called conservators whose policy is like that of a farmer with a wheat field whitening to the harvest who conserves his wheat by leaving it ungathered, to be devoured by the fowls of the air or to rot in the field. The folly of such a policy is the lesson of the powerful discourse delivered at Tulsa by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, and I am gratified, indeed, to have this opportunity, by the unanimous agreement of the Members of this House, to preserve that speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

To-day I would gladly pay a tribute of friendship to the high character, the great ability, and the noble qualities of heart and mind possessed by my colleague, but how idle that would be, for I speak to those who know him well, who value his counsels, who love him because of his unfailing courtesy and rare social graces.

SCOTT FERRIS by unostentatious but useful service in this House has reflected honor on the State of Oklahoma where his name is a household word. The people of his own district, his immediate constituents, are bound to him by the strongest and closest ties of mutual confidence and personal attachment.

As chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of this House, in a position of great responsibility and power, SCOTT FERRIS stands as an impassable barricade between the public domain and the predatory interests that would despoil it. Unmoved on the one hand by the visionaries who would deprive the American people of the usufruct of an estate incalculable in value, which they hold in trust for themselves and their posterity, and on the other standing firm against the insidious influence of corporate monopoly that seeks control and ownership of public lands and public water power, SCOTT FERRIS is himself a fearless conservator not only of the Nation's wealth but also of the people's rights.

Let me conclude by saying with sincerity and truth that, in my opinion, he well deserves the tribute paid by Canning to the younger Pitt in those fine lines wherein he named him:

A statesman unbiased by interest or fear,
By power uncorrupted, untainted by gold.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to print the speech referred to in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The following is the speech of Mr. FERRIS:

"Mr. Chairman, delegates to the Dry-Farming Congress, ladies and gentlemen: The tariff, the trusts, the currency questions do not and can not rise to the importance of the work of this congress. The subject matter of this congress is of vital interest to every man that eats. We hear much of the high cost of living and its attendant ills. I say to you this congress has to do with a subject that will solve it, and the only method of solving it. Men and political parties prate about theoretical ways of dealing with bread-and-butter questions, but this congress deals with the real question, with the real subject matter, with the real production. In short, all other questions are dependent upon the question of production, and in fact there is nothing left for any of the tariff or currency tinkerers to do until we have first solved the question of production.

OF WHAT DO OUR NATURAL RESOURCES CONSIST?

"Our public-land areas embody principally that section of the country from British Columbia on the north to Old Mexico and its warring inhabitants on the south, from the placid Pacific on the west to the west edge of the Mississippi Valley on the east. This vast area, embodying the western section of our country, has within its borders 700,000,000 acres of public land, practically unoccupied, undeveloped, in its natural state. Comparison is always a forceful teacher, and it may be interesting to know that this wonderful region in area is three times greater than the entire German Empire.

"This enormous area consists of agricultural, mineral, and forest lands, all under the exclusive control of the national administration, far removed from the scene of action. Calling attention to this enormous area will, I think, give some idea of the magnitude of the propositions to be considered in the government and business management of this undeveloped empire. Again, the magnitude of area must of necessity sink into insignificance when we consider the vast mineral resources hidden beneath the surface, consisting of iron, coal, petroleum, asphaltum, phosphates, copper, zinc, gold, silver, cinnabar, and every species of precious metal known to our geologists. So little is known of this enormous wealth by the the average citizen that a word of explanation may, I think, be inviting.

COAL ENOUGH FOR 7,000 YEARS.

"The Geological Survey, constituted by Congress, maintained by Congress, a great and important arm of our Federal Government, headed by Dr. George Otis Smith, a brilliant, forceful man, through a special survey, under the auspices of the United States Geological Survey to determine our coal resources, in 1907 and 1908, shows an aggregate of coal deposits in the United States of 3,076,204,000,000 tons. I think it will be observed that the approximate annual output of coal aggregates 400,000,000 tons. It will be observed that by ordinary mathematical computation that we have enough coal located, determined, on hand, in the ground, with naught between it and the furnace save willing hands and labor to remove it, to supply this Nation for 7,000 years. To reduce the problem to a smaller area and reduce these startling and enormous figures to the comprehension of all of us, I call to your attention the fact that the one arid State of Wyoming has a coal deposit aggregating 424,085,000,000 tons—enough to supply this sisterhood of States for a thousand years.

"We read in the magazines, we hear campaign orators on the stump assert that this Nation has exhausted its resources and frittered them away, but it is not so. If they were to be believed, our Nation would have little to invite those from the other countries to come and share with us the bountiful resources of the richest, happiest, and most progressive Republic in all the world. I can not sit silent and allow the uninformed to blast and wither the beckoning hand of opportunity for those with brain and brawn who would come and help develop our resources, which as yet have scarcely been scratched.

ENORMOUS AREAS OF TIMBER.

"It has been earnestly asserted that the Republic is almost without timber, but that is not a true statement of conditions. The official reports of the Federal Government develop the fact that we have 600,000,000 acres of timberland in this country. Germany has but 35,000,000 acres. The forest growth of the German Empire is estimated by that Government at 636 feet board measure per acre annually. If we estimate our forest growth at 300 feet board measure per acre annually, which is less than half of the estimated growth of the German Empire, our increase in forest growth annually will amount to 180,000,000,000 feet. Statistics carefully compiled tell us that we use as a nation 50,000,000,000 feet per annum; this increase alone is approximately three times the amount we consume annually as a nation. Now, allowing for losses by forest fires, decay, wind destruction and waste, our forests are now producing by natural growth more than twice as much timber as a nation than she herself consumes. It is true some portions of the country by fires and denudation have been stripped of their forest growth. But I think in the face of the above figures, which are reliable, that this can hardly be startling and of more than local import. I am not one of those who believe it right to either think or speak lightly of forest waste or inattention, but I am one of those who believe in using our forests and the molding of their products into a multitude of forms and let nature reassert herself and grow new forests more beautiful than the first.

OIL ENOUGH TO LAST 50 CENTURIES.

"The best estimates at hand disclose the fact that this vast empire has well-defined oil areas already prospected, tested, and exploited that show enough oil to supply the world's needs for fuel, illumination, and lubrication for at least 5,000 years. Recent developments in fair Oklahoma alone but indicate the boundless scope of this one natural resource. Its development by the sturdy explorer has converted cow camps into cities, cow trails into highways, poor men into rich men, and hovels into homes. It is and has been a beacon light pointing the pathway of hope, obliterating skepticism and doubt.

"It has caused Oklahoma to be a field of opportunity for every young man with brains in his head and brawn in his arm from every State in the sisterhood. It has given us a greater population than Arkansas, a population equivalent to that of Kansas, a State of happy homes and prosperous people; in fact, oil is king. Oil has given us light instead of darkness, warmth instead of chill, automobiles instead of oxcarts; oil has given us Tulsa, and Tulsa has given us all things.

IRON ORE ENOUGH TO LAST A THOUSAND YEARS.

"It has been asserted, more or less seriously, that our iron ore was fast vanishing and that those now here would live to see a famine in iron ore and the attendant consequences, but, gentlemen of this Congress, this assertion is not borne out by the facts. The investigations of our own United States Geological Survey, made in 1908, disclose the fact that the known iron-ore deposits of the United States amount to 62,840,000,000 tons, or enough to supply our country at the present rate of consumption for more than a thousand years. Again, it will be observed that iron ore once used may be used again. For example, iron may be smelted and resmelted again and molded into a multitude of forms of usefulness and value. It will be observed that as time progresses and scientific methods improve and as industrial operations multiply old machinery, old rails, iron beams, outworn rolling stock, and every kind of iron manufactured will be returned to the furnaces after it has lost its usefulness in its present form; hence an ever-increasing supply by this reutilization of iron will extend the supply something like 2,000 years, or 20 centuries.

INEXHAUSTIBLE SUPPLY OF PHOSPHATE ROCK.

"Again, it has been asserted in public utterance and through the press that our phosphate rock, which is used to fertilize and replenish impoverished soil, was fast becoming extinct and would soon vanish altogether. These alarming assertions are not corroborated by the investigation of the Geological Survey, which makes investigations without interest, without hysteria, without commotion, but in a calm, deliberate, and painstaking way. As a result of an investigation had by the Geological Survey immediately prior to the years 1908 and 1909 it was the judgment of that bureau that there were between ten and twenty billion tons in the area examined of first-class phosphate rock suitable for fertilizer. It will be interesting to know that the entire amount of this product used in the United States in a single year aggregates but approximately 1,500,000 tons. It will be observed that I am not taking into account the immense phosphate beds of Florida, South Carolina, and Tennessee. The best evidence seems to disclose that these beds alone would supply our country for 50 centuries.

"I do not now—I have not in my seven years' service on the Public Lands Committee felt that the value of this wonderful product could ever be overestimated. It puts life in the soil that has become depleted; it doubles the production of the virgin soil; it makes fertile land out of sterile land, rich soil out of poor soil, productive soil out of hardpan; and has its myriad forms of usefulness, the half of which has never yet been told. It is not the subject of waste, but it is the subject of monopolization. Neither moth, rust, forest fires, nor decay can reach this princely product, but the hand of monopoly can and will, if without restraint, secure, corner, and monopolize it if wise and beneficent land and mineral laws are not enacted to prevent it.

"I hope this congress, in conjunction with its other timely tasks, will aid the Congress of the United States and the Committee on Public Lands, of which I have the honor to be chairman, with their best suggestions as to how to develop these phosphate beds and ward off the cruel grasp of greed and monopoly. I am not one of those who would lock up our Nation's storehouses and deny the people who have made this Republic what it is access to them; but, on the other hand, I should oppose with such earnestness as I have at my command, first as a citizen, second as a Congressman, third as the chairman of that great committee which has to deal with these matters, every approaching step of monopoly—monopoly which ever stands ready to pick the threadbare pockets of the American farmer. It is my one hope that this congress in its wisdom may advocate strenuously the policy of use but forever fight and oppose the policy of monopoly, greed, and abuse. Use begets progress, progress begets industry, industry begets hope; these elements combined have in the past made this Republic possible and will in the future mark its advancement and make it the leader among the nations of the earth.

SWEEPING WITHDRAWALS NOT FOLLOWED BY INTELLIGENT ADMINISTRATION DISASTROUS TO TRUE CONSERVATION.

"For example, on December 31, 1912, there were withdrawn from entry in the several States the following areas of land:

	Acres.
Coal withdrawals	65,909,712
Oil withdrawals	4,677,302
Phosphate withdrawals	3,291,527
Water-power withdrawals	1,843,475
Reservoir withdrawals	101,758
Public-water withdrawals	86,122
Precious-metal withdrawals	9,787
Total	75,919,083

"It will, I think, be readily observed that such sweeping withdrawals unless accompanied by painstaking classification become a great detriment to the State from a taxation standpoint, and retard development and progress from both a State and National standpoint; for example, Alaska has been so shamefully handled and administered upon that the Territory has become a political football, and Alaska has suffered intensely as a result thereof. Congress is even now debating seriously the advisability of the $35,000,000 Government bond issue to construct a railroad and operate the Alaskan coal mines under governmental supervision.

CONGRESS HAS GRANTED SOME RELIEF, BUT MANY STEPS YET NECESSARY.

"In the last Congress a bill was passed creating a commission to modify, codify, and revise the present land laws of the United States so that they would be applicable to the conditions of the present day.

"The passage of this bill was most opportune, and, I believe, from it will come some modifications that will be helpful to settlers, to miners, and to the Government which is to administer the trust.

THE THREE-YEAR HOMESTEAD LAW.

"It will be remembered that the humid areas of the Eastern States were settled under the five-year homestead law. The last Congress observed the necessity and put into execution a three-year homestead bill which is a boon and a blessing to the settler, an aid to the Government, and a just piece of legislation designed to advance the West.

RIGHT OF APPEAL TO THE COURTS.

"The changing conditions of the times, the rapid changes in the personnel in the departments, the sweeping changes in public sentiment with reference to our public affairs all make it exceedingly necessary that every miner and every settler have the right of appeal to a court where under the Constitution and our laws he can have his day in court. Once granted this day in court, he will not have to have his rights as a miner, as a homesteader, frittered away, sacrificed and lost by reason of his failure to prophesy what the latest whim of the department may be. I have long thought this a burning necessity; I have long thought it would be a wholesome matter for all concerned. It would be a forum where the homesteader would be secure in all he is entitled to; no more and no less. He would be free from the whims and caprice of bureau heads, who either do not know or can not understand the intention of Congress plainly expressed.

WITH ALL THESE RESOURCES NO ADEQUATE PUBLIC-LAND POLICY IS IN VOGUE.

"With all this enormous wealth decreed to us by nature and by purchase, with all the mineral deposits slumbering in the ground untouched, yet the United States, with all its patriotism, with all its wisdom, has as yet no well-defined, well-digested, rational policy for the occupation and development of the surface or the mining and removal of the wealth beneath it.

"Our land laws are in many respects crude, irreconcilable, inefficient, without uniformity, confusing to the brain of the settler, impossible of interpretation by the layman—a jargon of inconsistencies retarding progress and development. Most of our so-called land laws, in truth and in fact, are not land laws at all, but are simply a jargon of Executive orders, rulings, interpretations, and decisions made by different bureau chiefs and clerks in the ramifications of the various bureaus of the Interior Department. For example, within my short service in Congress we have had four different Secretaries of the Interior. They served in the order as follows: Garfield, Ballinger, Fisher, and Lane. The views of these four men who answered to this high calling have differed in policy, on questions of law, on questions of construction, while the poor confused homesteaders and miners suffered from the ever-changing and conflicting views of those who ruled over them to an extent almost greater than they could bear. Many of these decisions are not only independent of each other but are contrary to the law as well. They are actually obstructive to the settlement of the lands of the West and a blight on the development of the unbounded resources of a Nation that is richer than we know. These opinions are changed, reversed, and amended from day to day as the new Secretaries and new bureau heads come onto the field of action, so that the status of land settlements and industrial enterprises in the West is constantly imperiled, impeded, and full of heart aches for America's home builders. On the question of the management of our public lands and the minerals that slumber beneath them the last two national administrations have been wandering in a maze of conjecture, which is blighting to both East and West. For the last dozen years the solution of these western problems and the handling of the Nation's storehouses has been one that has engaged the minds of our best men of all political creeds and faiths.

"So far as I have been able to observe, and my observations have been more than casual, having been a member of the Public Lands Committee during four Congresses of two years each, the Government has accomplished but one thing, and that is to withdraw from every sort of entry the major portion of our public lands of the West that are valuable for any purpose. This plan has one good element, and that is it gives us time to think and study out a policy, but I desire with such earnestness as I have at my command to call to your attention the fact that the mere withdrawal of land does not in any sense solve the mineral and public land problem. It merely magnifies the necessity for the solution of the problem. It is therefore, in my judgment, the duty of not only this congress, but likewise of the Congress of the United States, to see to it that these lands withdrawn are quickly but efficiently classified and put to their proper use, whatever that may be. In other words, if great areas of land have been withdrawn for forest purposes when tree growth is unnatural and impossible in that particular zone or elevation, certainly so flimsy a veil should be removed and the land placed to its proper and dignified use. On the other hand, if large areas of land have been withdrawn for mineral purposes and there is no mineral present, surely the land should be restored, so that home builders may cultivate them and they shall serve their proper function allotted them by nature. Again, if coal lands, mineral lands, and other lands known to be chiefly valuable for mineral, precious or otherwise, are now subject to entry and acquirement, it is the patent duty not alone of this congress but of the Congress of the United States to prevent monopoly, to prevent extortion, and proceed to have this mineral extracted, not for the benefit of the few but for all the people.

"Again, if there now be lands covered with valuable timber, chiefly valuable therefor, subject to homestead entry and acquirement under the provisions of the homestead law, surely it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to enact legislation and use every arm of the new and progressive administration to prevent such abuses and misappropriations. I am in full harmony with that provision of the national Democratic platform which asserts:

"We believe in the conservation and the development, for the use of all the people, of the natural resources of the country—

"And, further, I agree with the platform wherein it asserts—

"Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be rigidly adhered to.

"I was a delegate in the national convention that formulated that platform, and I am proud that the party of which I am an humble member and the new administration have taken their stand on the side of use rather than one of nonuse and abuse. Again, I am in full harmony with the platform molded at Baltimore, to which the new administration is so faithfully adhering, when it said:

"The public domain should be administered and disposed of with due regard to the general welfare. Reservation should be limited to the purpose which they purport to serve and not extended to include land wholly unsuited therefor. The unnecessary withdrawal from sale and settlement of the enormous tracts of public land upon which tree growth never existed and can not be promoted tends only to retard development, create discontent, and bring reproach upon the policy of true and effective conservation.

"There are times in the lives of men and political parties when we must protect ourselves against our friends. Real conservation and real conservationists of our natural resources are our friends, and this is one of the great questions of the day and time, but the elasticity and false construction of the term seem unfathomable and at times seem unconquerable. For example, those conservationists who believe in fighting the hand of greed, the hand of monopoly, the hand of extortion and irregular dealing when reaching into the Nation's storehouse are the school of wise conservation to which I think we will all finally belong. The conservationists who believe in a policy of nonuse, a policy of bitter opposition to everything progressive, stubbornly opposing well-regulated use and development of our boundless resources are, in my judgment, a school of perhaps patriotic thought, but without real first-hand information as to the true conditions that prevail. This school of thought must of necessity sooner or later give way, be supplanted, and retire in favor of those who put to the highest and earliest use every resource of the Republic. With this later school of thought I shall take my stand. To this step toward the highest development, the greatest progress and the highest use, I shall bend every energy as a citizen and as a Representative.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER A REVELATION TO THE WORLD.

"In 1896 and in the years that preceded and followed that time the question of the scarcity of money wrought this Nation up politically as it was never done before. Men of all parties, creeds, and faiths became animated, excited, and in turmoil over this one great question. What has solved this question? What has quieted the public pulse?

"The answer need not come from me, but it comes from a thousand voices on every hand and from all political parties. It is the output of gold, the output of silver, that has solved this problem, which otherwise would not down. The output of gold in Alaska and the western part of this Republic has increased to an extent that has alarmed our financiers, has changed the standard of value the world over, has crucified 'sixteen to one' on a cross of gold, and has divested prophecy of its already too flimsy footing. The output of silver has made it a drug on the market so that only the richest mines can be worked with profit at all. This wonderful output of precious metals has raised the salary of the farm laborer from $12 a month to $30, has increased the price of day labor from $1 a day to $3 a day, has increased the price of beef cattle from 2 to 8 cents per pound, the price of hogs from 3 to 10 cents, the price of soup bones from 5 to 15 cents, the price of beefsteak from 10 to 30 cents, of bacon from 12 to 40 cents, and the half has never yet been told. Where is that man who says this sisterhood of States is not rich in all that the bountiful God of creation could bestow upon us? Where is that man who could grow careworn and gray over fanciful poverty that does not exist? Who is there here that would hide under the bushel the hope of reward in man in this great western section of our Republic? Much would I prefer to say by wise and beneficent land laws in substance that a home awaits you on the boundless prairies of the West where by irrigation and dry-farming methods you can have for your very own that one green spot called 'home.' Much would I prefer to say there need not be 500,000 patriotic Americans traveling to Canada in quest of homes and employment, but that you shall have employment here under the Stars and Stripes in a Republic where every man is equal before the law, where the door of opportunity and hope shall ever stand ajar to both rich and poor, and where every man is a sovereign and no man wears a crown.

"Our beloved Speaker, CHAMP CLARK, who left the Speaker's desk to speak on the three-year homestead bill that became a law during the last Congress, on March 20, 1912, on the floor of the American House of Representatives said:

"Benton's theory was that the possession of homes by bona fide settlers ought to be made as easy as possible, and I believe this with all my heart. To me the most painful feature of the day in which we live is to see a constantly increasing stream of the very best American citizens going to Manitoba and Alberta. One day in my county, one of the richest, largest, and most influential counties under the sun, 43 farmers loaded up an entire freight train, every one riding in a Pullman car, chartered the train, and pulled out for Alberta. I am in favor of fixing it so that no American citizen will want to depart from the United States to secure a home in a foreign land.

"Who is there that does not agree with Speaker CLARK in this? His great warm heart aches when his people's heart aches. His hope increases while their hope increases. Who is there among us that would not like to keep within our own country every true American? Who is there about us that would not like to have it said that so long as homes abound, so long shall homes be found? For me and mine I take my stand with the frontiersmen who are willing to leave behind them men and women of more tender sensibilities and make this new country what it is and what we all hope it will be. For me and mine, as a citizen, as a Congressman, as chairman of the great Committee on Public Lands, mine shall be a policy of use but not abuse, mine one of industry not of idleness, mine one of homes not of bald prairies, mine one of mines and industry and not one of idleness and decay. Who is there about us or among us that does not believe that the $4,000,000,000 worth of precious metals quarried from the barren and bleak hills of the Rockies has not aided in the upbuilding of this Republic? Who is there about us that would cast a single blight or a single sigh at the hope and success of the Forty-niners who journeyed across the Rockies behind ox teams, enduring great danger and deprivation to bring to us the precious metals and the wealth of the generations that have preceded us? Who is there here who would, if they could, strangle the hope of man in this onward march of progress and development? The increase of basic money in the past, to-day, and in the future will determine the prosperity of the Nation.

WHERE DID WE DERIVE THIS VAST ESTATE?

"The area of land comprising the great bulk of our public-land holdings was derived in the following manner: The Louisiana Purchase, which, to my mind, was the greatest of all of them, cost the United States but $15,000,000; the Florida purchase, $5,000,000; the Mexican acquisition, $15,000,000; the Gadsden purchase, $10,000,000; and the Alaskan Territory purchase, which is the most recent one, $7,200,000. The entire amount totaled in area consists of 1,849,720,587 acres of land. The total cost, including the interest paid, is $88,157,389.98, or an average of 4.7 cents an acre for this entire area. Who is there among us who would say that the land laws should be made so harsh either by Congress or their interpretation of them that the American settler and home seeker might not find there a place he could call his home? This Rocky Mountain western region was the least inviting to the sturdy pioneer who was willing to leave his home and his loved ones behind to seek a new home in new and untried fields. It was Daniel Webster who, in debate while the western territory, which we acquired from Mexico, was in process of acquirement, said:

"What do we want of that vast and worthless area, that region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands and whirling wind, of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put those great deserts and those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever do with the western coast, a coast of 3,000 miles, rock-bound, cheerless, and uninviting?

"Who, I ask, has blazed the way and broken down the views and prejudices held by Webster and those that agreed with him about those conditions? Has it been that boy who preferred to patiently wait until his father had bequeathed him a child's part of the parental roof and the parental farm, or shall we give credit to that boy imbued with courage, dauntless, courageous, charged with a thousand volts of hope and ambition, who said to those behind, 'Take the old homestead. I'll seek a new home in the West, so your portion may not be a small one.'

"Much would I prefer to take my stand with him who said: 'Westward the course of empire takes it way.' Much would I prefer to take my stand with that pioneer with his covered wagon, who has converted the land of savages, wild beasts, and prairie dogs, as described by Webster, into happy, prosperous, contented cities, villages, and homes. After the settler and frontiersman have contended with the droughts, the hot winds, the grasshoppers, and the uncertainties of agricultural production in an earnest endeavor to secure a home for himself, I shall not be one of those who would make his efforts to secure a home for himself and his loved ones more difficult of acquirement.

THE WEST STILL AN UNDEVELOPED EMPIRE.

"The most splendid civilization of remote antiquity was established in desert lands. The remains of ancient cities in Egypt, Persia, and Arabia, in the valleys of the Euphrates and the Nile, reveal but partially the wealth, the grandeur, and the possibilities of our semiarid West under irrigation, dry farming, and improved methods. We surpass them in fertility, in area, in minerals, and in surface possibilities. What marvelous things we find in this land of the desert, a region of which the mass of intelligent people of this Nation have little, if any, conception! The Congress of the United States itself knows not of its possibilities. The development of this virgin empire stands matchless, beckoning homebuilders come, and pleading for wise laws which will induce them to come. In the West are homes for the homeless, hope for those without hope. Truly it is a garden of opportunity.

WE STILL NEED THE MINER, THE SETTLER, AND THE PIONEER.

"Some of the laws of Congress and many of the rulings of the department seem to be made on the theory that we do not longer need the sturdy pioneer. To this no thoughtful man acquainted with the conditions in the West will ultimately subscribe.

"Such a theory is wrong in principle, rests on no firm foundation, is illogical, and is not clothed with that sound judgment that must attend every successful enterprise.

"We have for the last hundred years, we do to-day, and will continue, in my judgment, for many generations in the future to need the industrious, competent, honest, resourceful, and courageous settlers who open up our mines and our quarries, irrigate our fields, demonstrate dry farming, and who have the hardihood and the sturdiness to withstand the hardships incident to a section of the country which as yet slumbers almost as nature left it. To say that we can dispense with these soldiers of fortune is to say that the West will return to that state described by Webster, 'A country of savages, wild beasts, prairie dogs, and barren plains.'

"In my judgment the United States should long hesitate to follow theories that greatly interfere with the honest settler seeking a home and the honest miner seeking fortune to enrich the world. We should not inflict Federalism and long-range government upon them until we blight the hope of individual ambition and endeavor. We should fight monopoly and graft and greed at every turn of the road, but we should not pursue a nagging and gnawing process with the settler or the miner who is seeking to develop the country in an honest and patriotic way.

THE PIONEERS EMPIRE BUILDERS.

"The sturdy pioneer of the West is entitled to patient, painstaking, and generous treatment at the hands of our Federal Government. The men who are wrestling with the drought, the semiarid conditions, the wild and unsubdued sod, and all the hardships and vicissitudes of the great mountain ranges and desert plains of the West, who by irrigation, dry-farming methods, and mining are converting the West into a garden of prosperity, who are ranging their flocks and their herds upon a thousand hills, who are chiseling from the unquarried rocks their boundless treasure, are our brothers in manhood, are our equals in intellect, patriotism, and integrity; yea, they are our superiors in courage. Why should they not be accorded every consideration that was accorded the early pioneers of our earlier settled States? What they have already accomplished in the face of adversity is the marvel of the century and beyond the hope of us all. With proper consideration at the hands of this Government, with careful and well-digested laws to govern this unbounded estate, with wise administration in the Interior Department their accomplishments have but just begun.

"The new administration just budding into power promises by their platform to restore the Government of the fathers and give the settler and the home owner a new lease on life. The platform asserts that 'the public-land laws should be administered in a spirit of the broadest liberality toward the settler.' I submit no more patriotic task could be launched by the new administration than to inspire new hope in America's home builders and inspire those now without a home to seek one under our flag, under our country, so long as homes abound. Let us hope that this congress convened at Tulsa, whose purpose is for the good and development of all, will put its sturdy shoulder to the wheel and urge the American Congress to give the American home builder and the American settler good laws, good administration, kind treatment, and good homes."

OF

HON. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Sunday, February 23, 1913.

The House had under consideration House resolution 867, paying tribute to the memory of Hon. GEORGE S. LEGARE, late a Member of the House from the State of South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the resolutions which have just been read at the Clerk's desk, and moving their adoption, I take but little time of the House. I wish to call attention to the fact that this day we have paid tribute to seven deceased Members of Congress. Probably we have never in the history of the Government been called upon to mourn so many of our fellows as we have in the present Congress.

I have not prepared any speech for this occasion, because my duties in connection with the Committee on Appropriations have been so arduous and exacting that it was impossible for me to give such time to such preparation as I would like. I see around me many of the colleagues of GEORGE LEGARE who have had the opportunity and have prepared beautiful orations for this occasion. I am not given to the use of flowery language nor to flattery, but I wish to say in plain, simple, unadorned English that GEORGE LEGARE was the most loving and lovable man that I have ever known—he made more friends, and warmer and faster friends, than any man of our delegation, or indeed than any other Member that I have known in my service here. His manners were pleasing; he could adapt himself easily to his surroundings; but anywhere and everywhere and always he was a perfect gentleman. He came from a long line of Huguenot origin; he manifested the culture and the refinement and the mentality of a hundred years in training and education; his mind was quick and penetrating; his judgment clear. Though frail of body, he was industrious, far more industrious than he ought to have been, to the very end. We can not understand why a young man of such mentality, refinement, culture, and usefulness should be cut down in what appeared to be the beginning of a great career, but faith tells us that it is right and all is well. The congressional party who attended the funeral at Charleston saw in that quaint, beautiful old city on every side and in every face evidence of the deep esteem and the affection that the people had for GEORGE LEGARE. It was manifest that as he had made friends with all men with whom he came in contact in Washington he had also made friends of all the people amongst whom he lived and with whom he came in contact in his own city.

In the presence of the largest crowd that I have ever seen at a funeral the friends of GEORGE LEGARE, with loving hands and bleeding hearts, laid him to rest in the beautiful Magnolia Cemetery in the beautiful city by the sea.
